- IX. Of the holy Rabban Mār Êliyâ.
- X. Of the things which the blessed Mār Êliyâ did at break of day.
- XI. Of the things which Mār Bâbhai and all the fathers did.
- XII. Of the unlawful accusation with which the holy Mār Jacob of Bêth 'Âbhê was accused, and of the judgment, remote from justice, with which he was judged.
- XIII. Of the things which took place in that monastery after the departure of Mār Jacob.

the histories of the most famous of the monks of Bêth 'Âbhê. In B. O., ii, pp. 490—497, No. XIII, Assemânî gave a list of the heads of the chapters, and in B. O., iii. 1, pp. 464—501 he gave a tolerably full analysis of this work, with a few extracts. A full description of the plan and scope of his 'Historia Monastica' is given in the introduction to the present work.

- XIV. Of the dispersion of the holy fathers into all countries, which although it might be thought to have been wrought by means of human passion, was, nevertheless, the Will and act of God.
- XV. Of Rabban Bar Hadh-bhě-shabbâ, and of the monastery which he built.
- XVI. Of those men who were driven forth [from the Great Monastery]¹, where they went [and dwelt]¹, and how they pleased God.
- XVII. Of the coming to them of the holy Abbâ Yâwnân (Jonah) the ascetic, from the Great Monastery.
- XVIII. Of Shělêmôn (Solomon) bar-Gârâph, the solitary, from the Monastery of Bar-Ṭûrâ, and of the histories which he wrote.
- XIX. Of the blessed Mârîhâbh, and of the virgin nun and recluse.
- XX. Of Mâr Jacob of Bêth ‘Âbhê.
- XXI. Of the coming of Mâr Jacob from the desert to the Great Monastery.
- XXII. [p. 5] Of his departure from thence to the monastery and laura² of Bêth ‘Âbhê.
- XXIII. Of king Khesrô (Chosroes), the son of Hôrmîzd.
- XXIV. Of the honourable Bastôhmagh, the father of the holy Mâr Îshô‘-yahbh [the Catholicus].
- XXV. Of Grîghôr (Gregory) of Tell Besme, and of the office of Catholicus which he received.
- XXVI. Of the cessation of the Church after the departure of Mâr Sabhr-Îshô‘ the Catholicus.

THE AUTHOR[S APOLOGY]¹ TO HIM WHO ASKED HIM TO SET [THE HISTORIES] DOWN IN WRITING.²

In accordance with the causes which summoned us to converse with each other from time to time, and the histories of the holy men, praises of whom were stirred up in us, and the glorious stories and rehearsings of whose histories I was shewing forth before thee, O our brother 'Abhd-Îshô', thy mind was filled with truth, and thy tongue with the praise of the power Who made them victorious, and Who moved His saints. And thy wisdom offered to me earnest supplications, and helpful persuasions and directions, to set down [my] stories of holy men in writing, in order that their unwritten histories might neither be forgotten nor sink into oblivion. And [thou didst ask] me to give to thee written accounts of them as a rich inheritance, and as an excellent loan, that thy holiness might meditate upon them, and that thy divine understanding might be sanctified thereby. And although for some years past this wish hath never been absent from thee, and thou wast diligently urging me to do [this], sometimes with the living voice, and

Now, I am commanded¹ by the holy brethren of the holy Monastery of Bêth 'Âbhê,² in which I have ministered for many years, that of the written and unwritten histories, and excellent stories of the holy men who have lived therein, and have been victorious, I should spin a thread of the stories concerning them, formed of the matters omitted by the compilers of written and unwritten histories, and of a small selection of stories which I have heard from approved and venerable men, with whom I have become acquainted there, and that I should set forth in writing, with much brevity, such accounts as I should find scattered here and [p. 18] there in the narratives of others, and in the ecclesiastical histories of ancient authors. And since in the stories which are my own I do not repeat untrue things, I shew forth the trustworthiness³ of theirs. And behold I will go into the gardens of

O.*, iii. 2, pp. 730 and 876). It was one of the monasteries exempted from the jurisdiction of the bishop by Îshô'-yahbh of Gëdhâlâ ܘܢܘܨܬܐ ܕܡܢܘܨܬܐ ܕܡܢܘܨܬܐ ܕܡܢܘܨܬܐ ܕܡܢܘܨܬܐ (Mai, Scriptorum veterum nova collectio. t. x. their victorious deeds as into a field, and, as it were, I will glean and gather up together the choice and well-filled ears of corn, and I will pile up into one sheaf the heap of their bundles, that from thence they may go into the threshing-floors of hearing, and be ground in the mill of discernment, and be kneaded in the kneading-trough of belief, and be baked in the oven of love, and laid as a glorious offering upon the altar of the mind¹ of the Holy of Holies. For it is said, "The mind which journeyeth to and fro in its state of nature is able to perceive, and to see, and to believe the glorious things of glorious men, and the accounts of the contests of mighty warriors, at the same time adding to its knowledge belief", even as spake he that saith, "and to belief also, confidence; and to confidence, excellence; and to excellence, righteousness; and to righteousness also, holiness; and to holiness also, constancy; and to constancy, hope; and to hope, stability; and to stability, strength; and to strength, love;² which is the crown of the completion of the excellent things, in which standeth our profession, and upon which is laid the foundation of our doctrine." Now those who only in a small degree have themselves laboured in the virtues of holy men, and have participated in the smallest degree in the great joy which is bestowed upon prosperous toilers in the ascetic life and upon discreet penitents, [p. 19] possess from within a firm conviction concerning these things which is not an external matter produced by misery and rumour, inasmuch as experience has taught them that these things which are stated are true.

Let the reader, then, perceive clearly, and let the listener understand, that the things concerning holy men which my narrative recounts are not vain imaginations of my own, for I have collected the materials for them from the things which have been said concerning them in the living speech, and from the written statements which I have found concerning them in the histories and traditions of others. And I shall finish the contest which I have undertaken at the wish of my brethren, and shall add according to the inclination of my opinion, those things which are accepted by discreet and prudent men, provided that they are not prejudicial to the truth in any particular, not the wonderful signs and miracles, and mighty deeds which these holy men have wrought, but to speak as [each] occasion shall require, and to add a word concerning each, one after another, on the things which have been wrought by them,¹ and to arrange all these things, one after another, in one consecutive order, a matter which belongeth to the care of writers, and which the order of historical works requireth. I shall² not confound story with story, or history with history, in such a manner that the mind of the reader will become confused by the mixture of matters, but I shall, with much brevity, set down each narrative by, and to itself, that from³ here universal history may arise,⁴ and I shall add story after story, in the form of chapters [each having] a distinct number. I shall begin my history with Mâr Abraham the Great, the father of the fathers of the holy men whom I have made ready my words to praise, as the cause of the effects and as the origin of the orders of ascetics which have sprung up after him, even as the blessed Abraham is considered to be the father of all nations,⁵ and Israel the father of the Israelites,⁶ and Aaron the father of the priests.⁷ And I ask our Lord, through the prayers of Mâr Abraham and of the children of his holiness, [p. 20] and I beg and entreat Him to give me of His spirit, even as [He gave] of the spirit of Moses to the elders of Israel,¹ that I may hear and relate glorious things of Him; that I may speak of the glorious things of Him in His saints; that the hearing of the listeners may be sanctified by the speech of my mouth; that His holy name may be glorified by my polluted tongue; and that by author and scribe, reader and listener, confessor and believer, may be woven the rope of glorious things for His holy name for ever and ever.

CHAPTER III.

THE INTRODUCTION TO THE HISTORY.

In the everlasting knowledge of the wise Creator, the elect are set apart, and the predestined are written down for the kingdom of heaven. And the types of the Divine² government which were written by the hand of Moses, testify that they indicated aforesaid the things which should happen and should be given at the end, for the confirmation of the fore-knowledge of the election of holiness³. For every matter of Christ our Lord was plainly brought about thereby, and inasmuch as it was given from heaven, it was inscribed on a rock in the face of heaven, for there, on mount Sinai, being overshadowed by a cloud for forty days, Moses wrote down the histories of the worlds which had been, and the commandments which had been given to the seed of Abraham.¹ And there, by the glory with which his face was clothed,² was it indicated that virginity and holiness³ should spread abroad in later times and be exalted.

And that thou mayest know that such is the case, follow after the footsteps of the life and conversation of Christ, and thou shalt find that He expounded [p. 21] and taught this plainly to His Apostles in taking them up to Mount Tâbhôr (Tabor), where He was changed to glory (i. e., transfigured) in their sight. And He commanded the earth and it brought up Moses, and He beckoned to the heavens and they brought down Elijah,⁴ and He shewed that the virginity and holiness which were with Moses were counterparts of the virginity and holiness which were with Shêm'ôn (Simon) in the heights of His kingdom. And He made virginity and holiness perfect for them at the time of His Ascension from the earthly Shâlîm (Salem) to Jerusalem, the great city which is in heaven, when He lifted up His holy hands and blessed them, and commanded them, saying, "Go ye forth and teach all nations, and baptize them in the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and teach them to keep everything which I have commanded you; and behold I am with you all the days in which the world maintaineth the course of its generations".⁵

³ "Virginity and holiness" here mean the ascetic life.

⁴ This sentence has reference to Deut. xxxiv. 6 and 2 Kings ii. 11, where it is stated that Moses was buried in the earth, and that Elijah went up to heaven in a chariot of fire.

Virginity and holiness then descended from hand to hand among all nations, but especially among the pious armies of monks that exist in all quarters of the earth. And inasmuch as virginity and holiness were established in the mountains, and handed down from them,—by Moses in Mount Sinai,¹ by Elijah in Mount Carmel,² by the blessed Elisha,³ by the sons of the Prophets,⁴ and by Saint John in the wilderness,⁵ by those who were with Simon on Mount Tabor,⁶ by the Lord of the Prophets at the time of His fasting in the wilderness,⁷ and also at the time of His going up into the Mount of Olives,⁸—the ascetic fathers also went forth into the wilderness and the mountains to preserve the virginity and holiness which had been handed down to them by the Apostles, and to do battle against “principalities and powers, and with the evil spirits which are under heaven”.⁹ And that the Spirits and Will of God, which completed in the one case and maketh perfect in the other, is one, one of the saints testifieth, and saith, [p. 22] “The power which I have seen abiding in baptism, which giveth adoption as sons, and freedom, to those who are baptized, I have also seen in the dress of a brother on the day in which he received the garb of the solitary life, and it sanctified him for¹¹ his work.”

ADDITIONAL NOTES TO BOOK I. CHAP. III.

PAUL.

Abbâ Paul of Thebes, called by Jerome 'auctor vitæ monasticae' is said to have retired to the Egyptian desert in the Thebaïd during the persecution of Decius and Valerian, A. D. 250, and to have made his dwelling-place in a cave at the mouth of which were a palm tree and a spring of water. From the age of 22, when he retired to the desert, until he was 43 years old he lived on the fruit of the palm tree, which also supplied him with clothing; but afterwards, for the space of 70 years, he was fed by a raven who brought him half a loaf a day. Paul knew the Greek and Egyptian (i. e., Coptic) languages. By the command of God he was visited by Saint Antony, who discovered his cell by the light which shone from it; on the occasion of this visit the raven brought a whole loaf each day. This visit took place A. D. 341 (Tillemont, Mémoires, viii. 34. col. 2, at the top). Antony borrowed a cloak from Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, in which to bury Paul (who by this desired to show that he belonged to the communion of Athanasius), and inherited his palm leaf tunic which he wore on great occasions. Paul died about A. D. 342, aged 113 years, and his grave is said to have been dug by two lions. On the dates of the birth and death of Paul see Tillemont, Mémoires, vii. 308, and for the life of Paul see Butler, Lives of the Saints, Jan. 15; Acta Sanctorum, Jan. 10; Jerome, *Vit. ANTONY.

Antony the Great was a native of the village of Coma, which was situated near the town of Heracleopolis. He was born about A. D. 251, and he died on Jan. 17, 356, aged 105 years. He probably knew the Coptic language, but it is tolerably certain that he had no knowledge of Greek literature. Having lost both parents about the year 270, he gave all his goods to the poor, and retired to the desert at the age of 19; here he

OF THE BLESSED RABBAN MÂR ABRAHAM¹ THE GREAT, THE HEAD OF THE MONASTERY IN MOUNT ÎZLÂ.²

Now as God of old brought out the blessed Abraham from Ôr (Ur) of the Chaldees,³ and made him, by faith,

² Mount Îzlâ, the جبل الازل of the Arabic writers (B. O., iii. 1. 155*a*), is situated on the southern edge of the mountain called Tûr Abhdîn, about three farsah from Nisibis, and the river al-Hirmas flows at its foot. In this mountain were four monasteries, viz., the "Great Monastery" founded by Rabban Abraham; 'Umr al-Za'farân (see ܘܡܪ ܐܠ ܙܘܦܪܐܢ Yâkût ii. 663, and for other monasteries of this name see Hoffmann Auszüge, note 1312, p. 169); 'Umr Mâr Awgîn (see B. O., iii. 1. 147, note 4); and 'Umr Mâr Yûhannâ. See Hoffmann, Auszüge, p. 167 ff.

the father of a multitude of nations, [p. 23] so also He spread abroad and made to increase this holy habit of the solitary life in all the country of the East, by the hand of [this] spiritual man, worthy of Abraham in name, and country, and deed, whom He established to be the father of the army of virgins and men of abstinence. For thus the ancients write concerning him, more particularly Abbâ¹ John, the writer of the 'History of Rabban Bar-'Idtâ',² and Rabban Rôstâm,³ of the Monastery of Bêth Kôkâ,⁴ in the History of Rabban Mâr Abraham, the

² Bar-'Idtâ, i. e., 'the son of the church', the founder of the monastery which bore his name, was a contemporary of Bâbhai of Îzlâ and Jacob of Bêth 'Âbhê; he must be distinguished from another Bar-'Idtâ, a monk in the Monastery of Şêlibhâ, near the village of Haighlâ on the Tigris, who lived about 690, with whom he has been confounded by Assemânî (B. O., iii. 1. 458). He wrote a monastic history which is quoted with respect by Thomas of Margâ (Bk. i, cap. 23, text p. 47; cap. 34, text p. 62; bk. ii, cap. 6, text p. 73 etc.). See Hoffmann, Auszüge, p. 181, Wright, Syriac Literature, p. 838. The day of the commemoration of Bar-'Idtâ was the same as that of Jacob of Bêth 'Âbhê, Bar-Hadh-bē-shabbâ, Kâm-Îshô', Aphrîm and "their companions the founders of divine assemblies in the country of Margâ and Dâsen." Wright, Catalogue of the Syriac MSS in the British Museum, p. 187, col. 2.

and dwelt in a secret¹ cave in Mount Îzlâ, in the neighbourhood of the city of Nêşîbhîn (Nisibis).² And he speedily became known unto men, inasmuch as he was ordained to be the cause of spiritual benefits unto many, through the everlasting fore-knowledge of Him who set him apart aforetime, that at his hands, and by his means, the holy fathers who were to become the founders of famous monasteries of the lands of the Persians, and Assyrians, and Babylonians,³ might become disciples. And the fame of his glorious deeds spread abroad into every quarter, like the smell of choice spices, and a multitude of ascetics were gathered together unto him. He invented this distinguishing mark of ours, and commanded that the disciples of this holy habit of life should have their heads shaved like a crown;⁴ now before the days and time of his coming, to learn and to become master of the heathen philosophy of the Greeks went to Athens, the famous city of philosophers, so in this case, every one who desired to be instructed in spiritual philosophy went to the holy Monastery of Rabban Mâr Abraham, [p. 24] and inscribed¹ himself in sonship² to him. Thus after many years, when the pursuit of the monastic life and voluntary abstinence had greatly increased, and when, during the lifetime of that holy man,³ fathers had gone forth from his congregation, and had, like him, built monasteries, he was gathered [to his fathers] in honour, and went to incorruptible life.

² نَيْشَابِين, نَيْشَابِين is a very ancient city of Mesopotamia situated in a rich and fruitful country about 120 miles N. E. of Mōsul (Nineveh), and 50 miles N. of the western end of the Sinjâr mountains; according to Ibn Baṭūṭah, (ed. Defrémery and Sanguinetti t. ii, p. 140) it is two days' journey from Gazîret ibn 'Omar on the Tigris. It is surrounded by the river Hirmâs which flows in several channels through the city. According to Yâkût (iv, p. 787 ff.) it contained 40,000 gardens, and was nine farsah from Sinjâr, and six days from Mosul.

⁴ Dâdh-Îshô^c succeeded Mâr Abraham as head of the Monastery of Mount Îzlâ, probably during the life-time of Abraham, at the end of the VIth or beginning of the VIIth century. He wrote a commentary on the Paradise of the Western Monks, probably meaning the Paradise of Palladius and Jerome, a discourse on the consecration of the cell, funeral sermons and epistles, some works on the ascetic life, and annotations to the works of Isaiah of Scete. The name means "gift of Jesus" ܕܡܪܝܢܐ ܕܡܪܝܢܐ. See Hoffmann, Auszüge, p. 173; Wright, Syriac Lit., p. 838; and B. O., iii. 1, p. 98, 99.

lived in Dairâ dhë Rishâ¹ (i. e., Monastery of the Head), in this country of Margâ,² with Rabban Êṣṭaphnôs (Stephen) the Great, who was famous and renowned in all the East. When he had continued with him for a period of seven years, he departed to Rabban Mâr Abraham, and was, it is said, the first to come to

² The position of the town of Margâ cannot be fixed exactly, but it was not far from Mōṣul in a N. E. direction; it is the Marj el-Mauṣil or Marj Abû 'Obeida of the Arabic writers مَرْجُ المَوْصِلِ ويعرف بمرج ابى عُبَيْدَةَ عن جانبها الشرقى موضع مَرْجُ بين الجبال فى منخفض من الارض سببها باغور فيه مروج وقرى Yâḳûṭ iv. p. 488. The province of Margâ is partially represented by that of Mâr Abraham of Gunduk (see Badger, Nestorians and their Rituals, vol. 1, p. 392), and had as its centre the province of Nâukur; it must also have comprised the arable plain, which forms an irregular parallelogram in shape, measuring twenty-five miles by fifteen, which slopes down slightly from Gebel Maḳlûb and the hill of 'Ain eṣ-Ṣafra, and which is bounded on the N. E. and E. by the Gômel* and Hâzir rivers, and on the S. W. and S. E., by the Upper Zâb and Tigris. The boundaries of the diocese of Margâ were, on the N. the crest of the Hâir mountains, on the W. the Mezûri mountains, on the E. Gebel Mâr Daniel, on the N. E. Gebel Maḳlûb, on the S. the Upper Zâb, on the S. E. a bend of the Hâir mountains. (Mâr Daniel is about 28 miles E. of Nineveh, and 'Ain eṣ-Ṣafra six or eight miles N. W. of Mâr Daniel; the Church of Mâr Daniel stands on the top of 'Ain eṣ-Ṣafra). Margâ is called مَدِينَة 'village', by Bar-Hebraeus (Chron. ed. Bruns p. 517. l. 7, ed. Bedjan p. 492. l. 15). Margâ must be distinguished from

* "The hill on which Mâr Daniel, another old Christian Church, is situated, and of which it occupies the highest and central point, is abrupt on its western and sloping on its eastern side." him. And he ministered unto him a long time, and after Mâr Abraham had departed from this mortal life to that of peace, Mâr Dâdh-Îshô^c became the head and governor of the monastery after him. And the historians magnify him and say that in respect of the humility which he possessed, and his despising of self, and his abstinence and asceticism, he surpassed all others of his time. And the name and glory of his godly habits of life was, like that of his master, carried into all places, and by his means that holy convent flourished, and increased in holy men who became his disciples.

Now when the holy Mâr Dâdh-Îshô^c had also departed to the life of blessedness, the holy Mâr Bâbhai⁴ the Great became the head of that holy monastery. But inasmuch as our holy father Mâr Jacob chose great humility, and to be thought of no account at all, according to what his disciples write concerning him, he made himself a stranger to all positions of worldly honour, and he made himself a servant of all that holy brotherhood. O.*, iii. 1, p. 88. col. 1. He must be distinguished from Bābhai bar-Nēsibhnâyê, who flourished under the Catholicus Şġlîbhâ-zġkhâ (A. D. 713—729), and who was famous for his beautiful voice. On the death of the Catholicus Gregory of Kashkar in 607, he together with Mār Abbâ the archdeacon (see B. O., iii. 1, p. 93. col. 1.), guided the Nestorian Church through a period of persecution and great difficulty. He was appointed inspector of monasteries by the Archbishops of Bêth Garmai, Adiabene and Nisibis, who entrusted to his care the task of rooting out from them such men as held the doctrine of the Mġşallġyânê. He performed his work with such zeal and success, and ruled the Nestorian Church so ably during this period that, after the murder of Chosroës II. in 628, he would certainly have been elected Catholicus had he not declined to accept the dignity. he abode without offence and without injury in [his] love for man, and in the love of the exact image of the excellence which [cometh from] the God of our frail nature. Now by the hand of this man, who was admirable in his manner of life, [p. 29] God, the Lord of all, exposed the secret crime which had taken place in that holy congregation in his days. And as God, the Lord of all, destroyed and slew the prophets of Baal by the hand of the blessed Mâr Elijah,¹ so it pleased the Lord of all to root out and destroy those evil thorns, which were fit and ready for the fiery furnace, that is, the unclean work² and manner of life of those men, by the hand of this namesake and fellow-soldier of Elijah the prophet. Now some say that he received a revelation from God, and that in an angelic vision he was commanded to go down from his own cell in the night season to the cells of those men; others say that it happened accidentally, and that he heard the noise of the rods which the women were using in weaving garments; and others that he found little boys and girls, the children of those men, playing round about the cells of their fathers, and that when he asked them who they were, and whence they came, they answered him saying, "We belong to this place, and our fathers are such an one, and such an one;"³ but by whatever way it happened, we must know that Elijah did not leave his cell without the divine command,—especially at eventide when a solitary should be diligent in casting choice aromas into the censer of his heart, to make from them a sweet-smelling savour for the whole night,—merely to go down [to walk] among the cells of the solitaries. Now when he saw and knew [what had happened], he marvelled with an exceeding great wonder. And since by nature heat of temper and exciteable and fiery zeal cleave to the race of Ishmaelites, he burned with fervour and became hot with wrath, and like Elijah the prophet he complained to God, saying, “The children of Israel have forsaken Thy covenant,¹ they have trodden Thy law under foot, they have forgotten Thy commandments, and instead of the fatherhood of Abraham their father, they have chosen for their father Satan the enemy of the race of man.”

CHAPTER X.²

[P. 30] OF THOSE THINGS WHICH THE BLESSED MAN DID ON THE MORNING OF THAT DAY.

It was a custom in that holy monastery that the board³ by which the congregation was summoned should not be struck, for any cause whatever, without the command of the head of the convent; and whenever this was done without the governor's command it was a sign and an indication that they were removing the head of the convent from his governorship.

Now when it was morning, the blessed Mâr Elijah went down to the monastery, and commanded the sacristan to go up and strike the board to summon the congregation. And when the sacristan heard [this], the house of the Lord God of thy fathers, those men who appeared to me in a vision." Now when these and other such like words had been spoken by the holy mouth, and trembling and terror had fallen upon every man, the holy Mâr Bâbhai said to him, "Thou must indeed shew me the proof of these thy words, and that which is proper, and that which is incumbent upon me to do, I will do." And Elijah making a sign with his hand, pointed out and discovered those wretched men, and said, "These are they who have erred and gone forth from the fold of life to feed among the thorns; these are they who have forsaken Jerusalem, and wished to walk among the serpents of the waste places of Jericho;¹ these are they who have made a calf in Horeb,² and worshipped a molten image, and have changed their object of honour into filth and unclean stinkingness! Behold there are women in their cells, and children with them! These are they whose wickedness hath driven me to give a command and to do a deed³ without the command of thy holiness."

OF THOSE THINGS WHICH MÂR BÂBHAI AND ALL THE FATHERS DID.

Now when these things had been thus zealously said and made manifest by the hand of this second

Elijah, the hearts of those holy men were cast down; and they removed from [the offenders] the garb of the ascetic life, and cut off the tonsure of their heads, and drove them forth and expelled them from thence, together with their wives and their children, and they kindled a flame and burned their cells with fire. Thus they rooted out that evil from among them, even as the children of Israel, when they were zealous with the zeal of the will of the Lord, destroyed the children of Benjamin¹ with the mouth of the sword, because they had corrupted the ways and paths of purity, and had renewed among themselves the customs of the Sodomites; and as Ishmael and the children of Kēntôrâ (Keturah), were driven forth from the house of Abraham,² and made aliens, that they might not inherit the paternal inheritance together with the son of the free woman; and as Manasseh also was rejected, who corrupted the holy generations of the Lord,³ and established in the holy temple an idol with four faces,⁴ [so also were they driven forth and rejected]. Now although these men went forth in the disgrace of which their actions were worthy, yet, they finally offered penitence, and remembered Christ their Lord, and they did not bring their lives to an end with acts of wickedness. Now, by the hand of God, we will speak concerning these men in the place which requireth it.

OF THE UNLAWFUL ACCUSATION WITH WHICH OUR HOLY MÂR JACOB OF BÊTH 'ÂBHÊ WAS ACCUSED, AND OF THE JUDGMENT, REMOTE FROM JUSTICE, WITH WHICH HE WAS JUDGED.

Now when those guilty men had been cast forth into exile, [p. 33] and had been justly driven away to a great distance, and Satan saw that his labour had been made of none effect, and that his disciples had been condemned, he wished also to cast out and to drive away¹ from that [monastery] those chosen and excellent men who would not enter into his snares, and who could not be caught in his nets. And he stirred up an accusation against² the holy Rabban Mâr Jacob, as being one whose cell was near to the habitations of those men, and as one who had known of their whole course of life, and who had, during the whole time past, sheltered instead of discovering them. And the holy Mâr Elijah according to his customary vehemence made an attack upon him³ saying, "All this folly is thine, and thou art guilty of all this sin; for if thou hadst revealed the matter and shown it to me at the beginning, these men would either have been admonished or expelled."⁴ And by this tumult which had risen up against him, this most meek and humble of all men, who knèw not that any sin besides his own existed in creation, whose eye was pure, and who never perceived wickedness in his neighbour, who never injured a man all the days of his life, who never chid and who was never angry, without making any answer whatever to those who blamed him, with his looks bent to the ground, and with his eyes full of tears, and with sorrowful penitence in his heart, was he driven forth, and he went out from that monastery by the order and decree of the word of Mār Bâbhai. And he departed with a venerable and holy disciple called Bar-Nôn who had been his companion for a long time past, and thus they two went forth to the mountains of K̄ardô¹ to lead the life of anchorites.

CHAPTER XIII.

[P. 34] OF THE THINGS WHICH HAPPENED IN THAT HOLY MONASTERY AFTER THE GOING FORTH OF MĀR JACOB.

It is evident that meekness and humility are the most excellent of all the virtues which are cultivated and perfected by the body and the soul, and we may learn this from many things; and that there is nothing worse than pride and arrogance we may also learn from hearing and reading and seeing. If then, according to the command of the Lord Jesus Christ, thou art meek and gracious, and art of no account in thine own eyes and thy heart is filled with penitence and self-condemnation, then thou shalt find that all men [are thy] friends, and thou shalt turn the harshness of foes to kindness, and our Lord God shall make thee beloved in the sight of all men. And thou shalt also live uninjured with destructive beasts and harmful reptiles, like this holy father,¹ who when he was unjustly condemned, and unlawfully accused, neither judged, nor thought himself to be like unto one of those men who condemned him, but commended the whole matter to God, to Whom belongeth the earth, and Who judgeth the round world with righteousness.

Now therefore, when the blessed Jacob had thus gone forth therefrom and the honourable head² of the monastery had laid a ban of many lines, [full] of denunciations and accusations upon him, (let him that desireth to know what manner of ban it was read the epistle which the holy Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh,³ Bishop of Bâlâdh,⁴

He was sent in 630 by Bôrân, the daughter of Khosrau II., on an embassy to Heraclius, and Bar-Hebræus says that when questioned by the Greeks as to his faith he confessed himself to be of the same faith as they, whereby the faithful in his diocese were much scandalized; when he returned he made an apology in which he said that he had not agreed on this matter with the Greeks. The Emperor made him take a wife like the other Patriarchs. I do not set it down here out of respect for Mâr Bâbhai, nor is it right to make an accusation against holy men who in common with other people, [p. 35] suffer from shortcomings or defects, especially¹ when the divine Will, which maketh upright men to act according as it pleaseth is hidden from our understanding) the holy fathers who lived there at that time saw what had been done, and that that praiseworthy man had without fault been driven forth unjustly, and they all put on indignation, and rebuked and chid the head of the monastery and strove with him, saying, "Thou administerest the things of God unjustly and after the manner of men, and according to a natural disposition which cannot be praised. Thou hast condemned the blessed and meek Jacob without our knowledge, and thou hast driven him away without our [consent]. Send then after him, wherever he is, and know that if thou dost not do so we all shall leave the convent. It is our opinion² that he has performed the work of God in a twofold manner, and that he has acted rightly in sheltering the sinners, and leaving them to the Divine examination, even though, according to what thou hast decreed concerning him, he had seen the wickedness. In which of the Scriptures canst thou shew us that we are commanded to neglect the care of our own souls, to judge the sins of others, after the manner of outside judges¹ who pursue gnats with care, and swallow camels?² On the contrary we are commanded to pray for our enemies, and to love him that hateth us, and that to him who would strive with us and who would take away from us our tunic, we should also give our cloak.³ Moreover also, it was thy bounden duty to correct those sinful men mercifully, and the women with whom they were united would have gone forth, and the men would have been sanctified by fasting and prayer, according to what we learn in the Holy Scriptures was done in various places to sinners and transgressors, even as the man in the [Epistle to the] Corinthians⁴ who lived with his father's wife, [p. 36] was corrected and afterwards accepted; and as is written in the elders,⁵ what Abbâ Pôman (Poemen) did to him to whom his wife gave birth, how he afflicted his heart and returned to his former manner of life; and as in the case of that elder by whose hands God turned back the young Alexandrian who went to him, saying, "He desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he may turn from his wickedness and live."⁶ Now when Mâr Bâbhai saw that the holy fathers

Thus also must it have been in this case, in respect of the assembly of our holy father Mâr Abraham,—now the meek and lowly Mâr Dâdh-Îshô^c had departed this temporary life—in the matter of the contention which was about to arise, by which many of the holy fathers of that monastery were scattered abroad in every place. OF RABBAN BAR-ḤADH-BHĚ-SHABBĀ, [AND OF THE MONASTERY WHICH HE BUILT].

Now this old man³ Rabban Bar-Ḥadh-bhě-Shabbâ came from the village of Ḥadhôdh,⁴ and according to what is written in the history of him, he also was a disciple in the Great Monastery; and he also came down therefrom in this dispersion and was one of that holy body of monks who came to Bêth 'Ābhê. And he dwelt in the valley which was above his village Ḥadhôdh, and built there a large monastery and lived in it. And there were gathered unto him a few brethren, and he remained with them and excelled in the deeds of a life of virtue all his days; and he gave large gifts to his monastery and bequeathed to it all his inheritance of the house of his fathers. And when Rabban Jacob came to him on his way to Bêth 'Âbhê, he also came with him to this holy monastery, and tarried¹ with him until Mâr Jacob was established in the governorship thereof; then he returned to his own monastery and dwelt in it all the days of his life. His convent continued for a great many years, and flourished and increased through the healings and mighty deeds which were wrought at the place where his bones were laid [p. 39]. Before our time, however, it was entirely ruined and deserted, and his holy body was removed and laid in the martyrium of this monastery² together with those of the holy fathers; may our assembly be preserved from harm by their prayers, Amen.

fasted;¹ it delivered the inhabitants of Nineveh from destruction;² and it also had mercy³ upon those sinful monks, and raised up their feebleness to the sonship of a good name.

Now when they had gone forth from that monastery, they sent away the women to whom the devils had united them, and they went to,⁴ to a quiet place where they dwelt for a long time. And with tears, and penitence, and spiritual suffering, and the burning pains of conscience, and the contrition of the understanding of their hearts, they purified themselves from the filthy pollution with which they had been defiled. And from being lost, they were found; from being cast down, they stood upright; and from being lame, they walked firmly; from being aliens, they became members of the household [of God]; and from being outcasts and abominations, they became saints and crowned ones; for they had put away from them all the riotous living with which they were contaminated [p. 40]. And their minds shone; and the broken faculties of their understandings were brought to life again; and they remained like a new man in all the united power which is established by the body and the soul, that is to say by practice and spiritual contemplation,⁵ the two powers by which, when united we please God, the Lord of all, and honour our neighbour.

CHAPTER XVII.

OF THE COMING TO THESE MEN OF THE HOLY ABBÂ JONAH
THE ASCETIC FROM THE GREAT MONASTERY.

Now just as when God, the Lord of all, wished to forgive the sins of king David, He sent Nathan the prophet to him,¹ and by means of the allegory which he composed, made him perceive his sin, and David confessed that he was guilty of death, and said, 'I have sinned', and the answer was returned to him, 'Also the Lord hath put away thy folly, thou shalt not die'; and as when He sent Jonah² the prophet, the herald of life, to Nineveh, and he preached to them, and by his hands the inhabitants thereof were turned back to what was seemly; so also did He send to those brethren who had sinned, and they were made a mockery, even as they deserved, and they were made outcasts from the household and inheritance of their fathers. But when they repented and turned to God with all their hearts,—just as did the children³ of Israel when they sent away the remnant of the children of Benjamin⁴ which had escaped from the sword of their brethren to the rock of Rimmon, and gave them the right hand, and took oaths to them in the name of the Lord that they might return to their villages, and to their inheritance, and that they might take unto themselves wives from Israel, and might live and not die—inasmuch as [p. 41] His whole graciousness and mercy overfloweth the measure of our sins, and the sea of His loving-kindness bursts forth to help and redeem us on the smallest pretence of repentance which we show forth,—so by the Divine revelation of His all-powerful Will, He made the blessed man, the holy Rabban Jonah, come to them from that monastery, and he forgave them their sin and sanctified them, and he armed them with the spiritual armour of the keeping of the commandments, and so by a course of life which was pleasing to the Will of God, they were all made perfect, and they departed from this world with a fair name which bore praise to the justifier of their lives, and the expiator of their offences, Christ our Lord, to Whom be glory for ever and ever!

OF SOLOMON BAR-GĀRĀPH² THE SOLITARY, FROM THE MONASTERY OF BAR ṬŪRĀ,³ AND OF THE HISTORIES WHICH HE WROTE.

There was a solitary brother whose name was Solomon bar-Gârâph, from the Monastery of Bar-Ṭûrâ, and the period in which he lived is found to have been in the days of the holy Mâr Hĕnân-Īshô^c the Catholicus.⁴

² See B. O., iii. 1, p. 186. His history of Jacob of Bêth 'Ābhê is praised by Thomas of Margâ. See chap. 24.

Now this man, from careful investigations and from the reports of trustworthy men who lived in his days, and from the traditions¹ of those who lived before his time, compiled histories,² graceful of speech and elegant³ of diction, concerning the anchorites and recluses who lived before his time in various places, and in these he also speaks concerning our Mâr Jacob of Bêth 'Âbhê. And it is from this history, [in] which he speaketh concerning him, that we know from those who knew [him], that after he went forth from the Great Monastery, he departed to the Mountains of Kârdô; and we are certain concerning [the time of] his expulsion and his return thither afterwards. [p. 42] But before I set down in writing that history of our Rabban [Jacob], I will write in this book another history which Solomon bar-Gârâph composed concerning the blessed Mâr-yahbh and a virgin, from which is made known how he returned to his cell in the Great Monastery.

among righteous men, the memorial of whom Rabban Mâr Aphnî-Mâran¹ composed in elegant language, and he said that the blessed Mâr-yahbh repeated [the following]:—“When I went up into the mountain that I might find God, Who is everywhere, and is not limited to [any one] place, I found there a holy woman, whose garment, such as it was, was made of dried grass, and her food consisted of the roots and wild fruits of the wilderness. And it happened that I found a female child with her to whom she gave suck. Now [the cause of] the fall of our vile race was also with her who, after having led the life of [holy and pious] men, I should more truthfully say of holy angels, for forty years, fell through the working of Satan. Why should I keep silence [concerning this]? Now the girl whom the Guardian of all mankind raised up from her was, like Mary, in the stead of Eve, heaven instead of earth, and a life-bearer instead of a death-bearer. And it came to pass not long after this that the holy woman, her mother, died having led a life of good deeds which were pleasing to God, [p. 43] and she left the divine woman, her daughter, in her place.” Now this holy man Mâr-yahbh was, at rare times, accustomed to visit this blessed woman, as he did her mother, and when he felt the help which came from her, he used to say that, “Although she was in the world, she was not of the world. And I know not at all if she ever lifted her eyes and looked in my face, for her mind was led captive by the vision of God. Now when I asked her, 'Art thou content that I should visit thee as I used to visit thy mother?' she answered me softly in this one word, 'As it pleaseth thee.'" Now this history teaches us that we should not rely upon ourselves, even though we be occupied with labours, but that we should take heed to men, and be silent, according to the word of the Fathers.

[OF MÂR JACOB OF BÊTH 'ÂBHÊ].

Now they say concerning Rabban Jacob, him of Bêth 'Âbhê, that when he went forth to that mountain [Kardô], it was the season of autumn. And a certain holy man dwelt near the hut of this blessed man without knowing who he was, for he lived in the rock above him, and he watched the manner of his life. And it came to pass one day that when the blessed Jacob went forth from his hut, the holy man went down and placed some of the herbs upon which he lived in the hut. And when [the blessed Jacob] went in and found them, he thought that they had been placed there for him by an angel of God, and he began to bow his head and his body down to the ground, [p. 44] and to return praise to God. Now when he took the Book of the Gospels [in his hands] and began to read, Satan, in the form of a serpent, straightway flew out between him and the Book, and because of his fear the Book of the Gospels fell out of his hands. And immediately he heard a voice which said, «Oh!». Now the voice was that of the holy man who lived in the rock above him, for he was looking¹ on when the blessed Jacob was overcome by the Enemy. And he straightway rose up and went down to him, and said to him, “Art thou thus so speedily thrown down in the fight?” And he continued, saying, “Go thou from mountain to mountain, until a woman meeteth thee; whatsoever she shall say to thee, that do, doubting nothing.” Now when he found her, the girl² was in a pear tree,³ and immediately she saw him, she came down and fled away. And the elder woman cried out to him at the top of her voice, saying, “If now because of this snake which thou hast seen thou art altogether terrified, how canst thou bear the severe onsets of devils? Rise up, and go back to thy cell, for by thy hands God is about to make a monastery,⁴ which shall be great and famous throughout all⁵ the East; and take thou this my Book of the Gospels, which is somewhat defaced, and give me thine.” Now inasmuch as that excellent man had no doubt whatever, the word of the woman was fulfilled [to him] in unutterable wonder; may we obtain mercy in the Day of Judgment by the prayers of him, and of her, and of all God-fearing people! Amen.

OF THE RETURN¹ OF MÂR JACOB TO THE MONASTERY OF MOUNT ÎZLÂ.

Now when the blessed Mâr Jacob had heard these things from the Lord by the hand of that holy woman, [p. 45] although he would rather that his life had been passed like that of a hermit, far away from human habitation, and that his dwelling and place of sojourning had been with the animals, that his mind by the rest and quietness of the desert might have been united to God, and that he might have been remote from all human feelings and affairs, yet when he learnt from that holy woman that it was the Will of God that he should return to dwell with men, and that he should become a father and a bringer up of ascetics and holy men, and should cause to increase hosts of holy men, who were to become the children and inheritors of light, he conformed to the Will of God which governeth² all things, and together with his meek and lowly disciple, he returned to that holy monastery [of Mount Îzlâ]. And [when] he had lived in his cell a little while, the heavenly power urged him, and he was by it selected³ to depart without delay; and it moved Mâr Bâbhai, and by means of it Mâr Jacob went forth therefrom and came to Bêth 'Âbhê; but as to how⁴ [he left] we are silent,⁵ because we do not wish to appear to bring [the charge of] strife against holy men by the hands of fools.

And when he came to Rabban Bâr-Ḥadh-bhě-shabbâ,¹ according to what is written in his history, he received him lovingly, and rejoiced in him greatly, and went with him to Bêth 'Ābhê. And he prophesied to him concerning the growth of his monastery, and of the greatness of the honour which Christ our Lord would allot to his congregation, and he tarried with him a short time; and the blessed Bar-Ḥadh-be-shabbâ returned to his cell and his monastery.

OF THE JOY AND HAPPINESS, AND THE FESTIVAL FULL OF GLADNESS WHICH THE MONKS MADE BEFORE HIM WHEN THEY CAME TO THIS PLACE.

Now as there is joy and gladness to the children, [p. 46] whose father having departed from them and gone to trade in a far country, and having tarried there a long while, afterwards returneth to his house in great prosperity because his business hath doubled many times, and appeareth among his children in perfect health and safety, with his face full of joy at the sight of them, as he findeth them occupying themselves in those matters which will give him pleasure, so also Abbâ Benjamin and his companions had joy and gladness in the coming of the holy Rabban Jacob to them. And they kissed his holy person, and he kissed them, even like Jacob

the coming of Rabban Mâr Îshô^c-zëkhâ to this holy man; the account concerning the fire which broke out in the monastery¹ and to which he set limits, and it was extinguished; and the account of the flood which took place in the two valleys, against which he went forth, and set bounds to it, and little by little he made it go down until it subsided, that it might not tear up the monastery and the temple in the first place in which it was built. And concerning these things Mâr Gabriel² wrote [also] in the metrical discourse which he composed on Rabban Jacob, saying, "He straightway extinguished the fire which broke out in the house of the monastery, and he made to subside the flood which rushed down to tear up its dwelling." [p. 48] And now, according to [the omissions made] in those things which Rabban Aphnî-Mâran wrote concerning him in his small history³ of his triumphs, and according to what we have set down in a preceding chapter⁴ [from the history] which Shëlêmôn bar-Gârâph wrote,—from which the greatness of this man Mâr Jacob is well made known—so also will I omit⁵ what [I wish to omit] and will make ready to write down the following story concerning the man, worthy of remembrance and of fair renown among the righteous, Bastôhmagh the nobleman, from the country of Hě-Smith, Thesaurus, coll. 577,2783, and Nöldeke in *Z. dhaiyabh.¹ Now he possessed in this country some small estates, among which was one called Bêth Zîwâ,² and whether it was to visit his estates, or to be blessed by Rabban, he was continually coming to him. And he always passed³ over the King's Bridge, which was below his village, the ruins of which are known to this day, and came by Estwân, a village on the Zâbhâ (Zâb). And it came to pass that once when he was passing over the bridge, he saw some sorceresses washing clothes by the Zâb, and they were singing to each other the songs of devils, and everything which was round about them danced as they sang. Now as he drew near to them on his way a small fragment of one of the refrains which they were singing became fixed in his mind, and when he had gone a short distance from them, he began to meditate upon what he had heard. And straightway devils joined themselves to him openly, and required of him, saying, "Command us to do something which thou wishest us to do." Now when Bastôhmagh saw this, he feared greatly, and he acted craftily with them and said to them, "Gather together these stones, and pile them in a heap,"—now these stones are known to this day—"and follow me whither I am going." [p. 49] And he drove the mule upon which he was riding quickly along until he came to the cell of the holy old man, and he said to the devils, "Take this mule, and watch him until I come out;" and he went in trembling, and revealed to Mâr Jacob what had happened to him. And Rabban answered and said to him, "Repeat before me what thou hast heard," and while Bastôhmagh was repeating, Rabban wrote down upon the ground with his finger what he heard. And when he had finished it all Rabban made the sign of the cross over the writing, and said to Bastôhmagh, "Repeat once more what thou hast already repeated;" and he said to him, "I know nothing of it whatever;" and Rabban answered, and said as he laughed, "Rise up, and look after thy mule, for the devils have loosed him and gone away."

Persian territory], in the fifteenth year of his reign,¹ the Christians demanded from him a Catholicus; and the king commanded that the blessed Gregory, Metropolitan of the city of Nisibis, whom Mâr Sabhr-Îshô^c improperly had cast forth into exile,—which act is spoken of in terms of condemnation in the Church until this day—should be appointed Catholicus. But certain of the teachers and believing men by whom this matter was to have been carried out, acted with deceit against the blessed Gregory, because they were afraid of the immeasurable zeal which that blessed man possessed. Now there was in Mâhözê² a certain expositor called founders, and to provoke the jealousy of the Persians, who incessantly complained, that this impregnable fortress had been constructed in manifest violation of the treaty of peace between the two empires." Gibbon, Decline, chap. 40. Concerning the first fortification of Dârâ by the Greeks see Wright, Joshua the Stylite, p. 70. Ibn Bațûtah describes it as "very old, white in appearance, with a lofty fortress which is now ruined" (ed. Defrémery et Sanguinetti, ii, p. 142). The ruins have been well described by Sachau in his Reise in Mesopotamien, pp. 394, 395.

Within the last six years the building on one side of the famous Arch of Khusrau has fallen, and the destruction of the whole ruin may be expected to follow in a short time, for the fine large bricks are carried away continually in boat loads to build new houses and walls.

OF THE STAGNATION OF THE CHURCH AFTER THE DEATH OF
MÂR SABHR-ÎSHÔ^c THE CATHOLICUS.

Now when the king heard and saw these things, [p. 51] and had learned that the Christians had not enthroned as Catholicus the Gregory whom he had commanded, but had craftily set up another, he forgot all his love and friendship for the Christians, especially that which he had for Sabhr-Îshô^c, and he cursed them angrily, [saying,] ‘Gregory² shall not minister as head’; and he swore by the Sun, his god, saying, “As long as I live I will never have another patriarch³ in the country of the East,” which [threat] he actually carried out, for the disciple of Satan contrived carefully that the holy priesthood should be removed from the Christians of the country of his rule. And since there was no father to beget, the children who had been born came to an end little by little and ceased; and so, until Khusrau died by the sword of the Christian children of the Church, the holy Church remained without a Patriarchate. And no Bishops and no Metropolitans

² Gregory died in the nineteenth year of the reign of Khusrau = A. D. 608—609.

³ About this time the famous physician Gabriel of Sinjâr flourished. As he was a Jacobite and had great influence with Khusrau, and was a bitter foe (ܩܘܪܕܢܐ ܩܘܪܕܢܐ) of the Nestorians, it is probable that the king’s unreasoning oath was due, in a great measure, to this man’s power over him. It is certain that for eighteen years the Nestorians had no patriarch. See Bar-Hebraeus, Chron. Eccles., ii. 109 and note 1. The whole question of the appointment of Gregory of Kashkar as Catholicus being a concession to Shîrîn the Queen and Gabriel of Sinjâr is fully discussed by Hoffmann, Auszüge, pp. 118—121.

OF MÂR BÂBHAI,² AND OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL VISITATION WHICH HE UNDERTOOK.³

At this time,⁴ among the company of the monks,

² I. e., Bâbhai of Bêth 'Ainâthâ in Bêth Zabhdai, to be distinguished from Bâbhai bar-Nēsîbhnâyê. See supra, p. 46, note 4.

³ The duty which Mâr Bâbhai undertook was the inspectorship of monasteries. It will be remembered that about the middle of the sixth century Ḥannânâ of Adiabene, the successor of Joseph Hûzâyâ in the school of Nisibis, had attacked the doctrines of Theodore of Mopsuestia, and had declared his intention of following the views of Chrysostom. As he was a teacher of importance and had a following of eight hundred pupils, the Nestorian Church ran a great risk of an internal schism. The views which he brought forward were condemned at a synod held under Îshô'-yahbh of Arzôn, (581—595), and at another presided over by his successor Sabhr-Ishô' (596—604). Joseph of Ḥazzâ or Arbêl adopted the opinions of Ḥannânâ, and his example was quietly followed by a large number of monks and others, and after the death of Gregory of Kashkar the Metropolitans of Nisibis, Adiabene, and Kerkûk persuaded Mâr Bâbhai that it was his bounden duty to visit all the Nestorian convents, and to expel all such as inclined to, or professed, the views of Ḥannânâ and Joseph of Ḥazzâ, together with any of the Měşallëyânê or "praying" monks who might be found therein. Mâr Bâbhai was qualified for his task in every way, and the manner in which he carried it out is warmly praised by Thomas of Margâ who, no doubt, expressed the general opinion of the Nestorian Church at this period on this subject. See Hoffmann, Auszüge, pp. 116—121; Wright, Syr. Lit., p. 842, col. 1 and the authorities quoted by him.

CHAPTER XXVIII.¹THE APOLOGY OF THE AUTHOR TO HIM WHO WOULD ASK A QUESTION.

If now any contentious man, or anyone peaceably disposed should ask, "Had not these great Metropolitans power to put an end to the wickedness which was springing up in their dominions without [the help of] Mâr Bâbhai?" [I answer] Yes, but every Metropolitan is not necessarily a doctor,² neither can every doctor know [how to decide] all questions in dispute, nor can every doctor successfully contend against all the various false religions; one doctor hath one quality, and another doctor has another. In the holy Mâr Bâbhai, [p. 53] however, all these various qualities were found: [the power of] arguing against heresies; [the power of] interpreting the Scriptures; [the power of] commenting upon the writings of the Fathers, and of investigating the matters in them which required searching out. And thou mayest learn concerning all his varied learning if thou wilt read the books which he composed; now eighty and four³ of his works on various subjects are preserved, and are held in honour by the holy Church. And also, the foul heresy of the Měşallëyânê began with monks, and it was even right that by monks it should be detected, as being those to whom the visitations of grace are [especially] manifest and the crafty workings of the devils which come upon monks who keep in the quietness of the cell. And also when the heresy of the Melchisedekians¹ broke out at Scete in the land of Egypt through the contemptible monks who said that Melchisedek was the son of God,²

² The Melchisedekians were a sect founded by one Theodotus an usurer who lived about A. D. 174. They first believed that Christ was a mighty, divine power, μεγάλην τινα καὶ θείαν δυνάμιν, and later this power was identified with the Holy Ghost. To these views they added the opinion that Melchisedek had neither father nor mother, and that his beginning and end were incomprehensible (See Theodoret, Haer. fab. ii. 6; and Epiphanius Haer. lv.). St. Jerome proved that Melchisedek was a man, and the governor of a district in Palestine (Tillemont, Mémoires, iii. p. 32). In the Book of the Bee (ed. Budge p. 35) it is said that Melchisedek was the son of Mâlâḥ (in Bezold, Schatzliöhle, p. 36 Mâlâkh) the grandson of Shem the son of Noah, and that his mother's name was Yôzâdâḳ. On a marginal note of the MS of the Book of the Bee which I called A (fol 39a) the name of Melchisedek's father is given as Harklêim, and that of his mother Shêlâthêil, ΔΑΔΑ, ΣΑΔΕΘ. The passages from the lexx. quoted by Payne Smith (Thes. col. 2146) add that "he sprang from foreign peoples, and on this account [the names of] his parents were not written in the [Book of] Generations, according to the words of Paul (Hebrews vii. 3). And the names of his parents were made known by revelation to the old man in the desert of Scete who, in his simplicity, meditated upon these things, by the counsel of Theophilus, Archbishop of Alexandria." For the account of the solitary who was brought by Cyril to Alexandria to consult God concerning Melchisedek's origin, see Cotelerius, Eccles. Gracc. Mon., tom. i, pp. 423,424; and Tillemont, Mémoires, iii. p. 32.

although there were doctors¹ and famous bishops in their days, yet Theophilus,² Bishop of Alexandria, allowed the blessed Abbâ Macarius, a monk, to make a refutation of this error; and that holy man actually did so, and made manifest the foolishness of their opinion. So also in the following affair which happened³ in the holy Monastery of Rabban Şëlibhâ, which is situated by the side of Hêghlâ⁴ Omêd, a village on the river Tigris, to the brethren Abhâ and Thomas and Bar-Idtâ, the solitary brethren⁵ and ascetics, who lived in that monastery. They were by craft falsely accused of being Měşallëyânê, although they were in no wise allied to them, and they were ascribed to their sect by certain men who, being envious of their strict and ascetic manner of life, wrote letters concerning them to the holy Mâr Hënân-Îshô⁶, the Catholicus, when he

And he wrote letters and sent them by their hands to this our convent of Bêth 'Âbhê, when the holy Mâr George² bar-Şayyâdê was the head, and the old men of the congregation were Abbâ Nathaniel,³ Abbâ Sëlibhâ, and Âbhrôi, and Gabriel⁴ who was surnamed Şephrônâ⁵

and many others. And when they had been lovingly examined by their brethren, and had manifested before them visitations of grace remote from all error, [the brethren of Bêth 'Âbhê] wrote letters by their hands to Mâr Catholicus [informing him of this]; and thus in justification remote from all falsehood of mind, those blessed men returned to their cells by the command of Mâr Catholicus. This then is the reason why the fathers who lived in the time of Mâr Bâbhai required of him to rule the Church, especially the congregations of solitaries.

OF THE COMING OF MÂR BÂBHAI TO THIS MONASTERY [OF BÊTH 'ÂBHÊ], AND OF THE MIRACLE WHICH WAS WROUGHT BEFORE HIM IN THE TEMPLE.

Now when the blessed Mâr Bâbhai was going round from village to village, and from monastery to monastery, visiting, and asking questions, and making enquiries concerning the orthodoxy of belief, and the soundness of the opinions in the minds of all the monks and heads of monasteries to whom he came, [p. 55] he was pleased² also to enter into this our monastery. Now he did not ask questions here on matters of belief, nor did he require from Rabban Jacob the results of his deliberations, for he was thoroughly well convinced concerning his doctrine and of the correctness of the actions of his holiness; for he looked with his discerning eye, and he saw the manner of the life which he led, and he smelled from him the savour of grace which entereth into the chambers of the soul, and maketh glad all its powers. And he required from Rabban "that he would abolish the glorious order of the service of readings which were read on the holy first days of the week in honour of the atoning Mysteries, inasmuch as it was not a thing appropriate for monks, but only for the clergy and the laity. For the solitaries are teachers, and are all occupied continually with the Scriptures, and courses of readings are therefore superfluous for them. They have no need of commandments, nor of the dispensation of God which is especially intended for the laity,¹ which they were originally. And moreover in this work there are questions and answers and speaking, and not every monk is able to guard his mind and his tongue equally well outside his cell as before he came out; but I would wish and desire that the monks should go forth to the congregation from their cells keeping silence, and that they should return to their cells in silence, as a guard for the tongue which is the storehouse of words." The holy Mâr Jacob said to him, "To-day let us perform the Holy Mysteries in the customary manner, and let us rejoice in the participation in the body of Christ our Lord, [before] thou departest from us, and let us read the readings and not change the order of our service; and whatsoever pleaseth the Lord let us do whilst thou art here." And this speech was pleasing in the sight of Mâr Bâbhai. Now there was in the martyrrium a certain man smitten with the palsy who had never walked, [p. 56] but he used to crawl along supporting himself upon his hands, and [when] he raised up his body, he supported all his weight upon his hands. And when the service of the Mysteries had begun, Rabban sent the man sick of the palsy to crawl into the temple, and he also selected for reading the passage from that part of the Gospels where our Lord commanded the paralytic to walk;¹ and he gave it to one of his disciples and commanded him to read it. And the paralytic crawled along and went into the temple, and the holy Mâr Bâbhai saw him. And it came to pass that as the reader was reading, when he came to that passage in which Jesus Christ says to the man sick of the palsy, "I say unto thee, O paralytic, arise, and take up thy bed, and go to thy house," the man sick of the palsy leaped up in the midst of the temple, and stood upon his feet; and wonder and astonishment seized all the brethren, and they all turned to the glorifying of God the Lord of all. And Mâr Bâbhai especially fell into wonder and amazement, and he knew and understood that this miracle had, for a long time past, been reserved for the holy Mâr Jacob to work on the day when necessity required it, that it might be a bridle and a thing wherewith to silence those who wished to abolish the order of service which his holiness had established in the congregation under his rule. And Mâr Bâbhai, and those who were with him, rejoiced and were glad and confirmed his order of service, and praised the ordinances of Rabban; and the blessed Mâr Bâbhai went forth from this monastery, full of joy and praise, to visit the other monasteries which yet remained to be visited.

CHAPTER XXX.

OF THOSE TRIED AND APPROVED MEN WHO BECAME DISCIPLES OF RABBAN MÂR JACOB IN THIS MONASTERY [OF BÊTH 'ÂBHÊ].

Now wishing to write concerning the upright children of an upright father, and the noble heirs to the inheritance of a noble man,¹ and the glorious disciples of a glorious father, it falleth to me first of all to give utterance to the sayings of the wise man,² "The righteous man who walketh in integrity, blessed are his children after him;"³ "for the joy of the righteous man worketh judgment,"⁴ "and his noble deeds are spoken of by his seed". And again, "The father of the righteous man shall rejoice, and if a father begets a wise man he will rejoice in him."⁵ And seeing that his own goodness was handed down as a goodly heritage to his children, the righteous man Mâr Jacob died; but perhaps he did not die, for he left many behind him like unto himself, concerning whom, by the hand of the Lord I make ready to write. And the departure of their father was not grievous unto them, because during his lifetime, they rejoiced him by the beauty of their manner of life, and they promised him that they would keep his command-and a contemporary of Abbâ John,¹ and he was greatly strengthened and enlightened in his knowledge and manner of life by the conversation and sight of that holy man; thus by the work of Rabban Ezekiel and the prayers of Abbâ John that holy monastery was built, [p. 59] and in it Abbâ John ended his days and was buried in peace. And Rabban Ezekiel wrote to this monastery to encourage and cherish our love and good will towards them,² saying, "May mutual love and fellowship between these two monasteries be preserved to the end of days." And I affirm and bear witness, as before God, that I learned this from Narsai the Elder, who was surnamed Dâdh Îshô', from the village of 'Ain Barkê,³ and also from an Elder who belonged to the monastery of Bêth Hazkîêl, when in the days of my youth I was copying letters before the Patriarchal throne of the holy Mâr Abraham,⁴ the Catholicus and Patriarch. And this love was preserved so entirely, that of everything in that monastery, of fruits and any good things which were not to be found here, the brethren of that monastery used to send some here, and the brethren of this monastery used to send

From their youth up they were disciples in this monastery of the divine man Mār Jacob, and everything which philosophy required and demanded, they received from the teaching of that blessed¹ man. Now the holy Abbâ Joseph, on his departure from the [service of] the monastery,² came forth to this laura,³ and lived the life of a solitary in it, and never came to the temple even on the day of the assembly. But at eventide, when it was quite dark, and no one could see him, he used to come and go into the refectory, and through a large opening that was built there,—which I also remember in that old refectory,—the blessed man used to take,—and very old men have also related this to me,—as much as he needed of the hard, burnt crusts, and of the pieces of bread which had dropped from the oven, and had been cast out, and depart to his cave. And when the blessed Mār Jacob departed this temporary life, Abbâ Joseph took his brother with him, and the two of them departed to Mount Zînai,⁴ where they led an ascetic life, and performed unnatural austerities. And inasmuch as Rabban Aphnî-Mâran⁵ and Rabban Sabhr-Îshô^c, who was surnamed Rôstâm,⁶ have written histories con-

OF RABBAN SARGÎS (SERGIUS) WHO WAS SURNAMED

Now this Sergius, worthy of all blessedness, came from the country of Bêth Garmai; he was instructed in doctrine in various schools, [p. 61] but more especially in that of Bêth Râsthâk,² a village in the country of Margâ, at the time when Rabban Kâ-m-Îshô^c, a native of Bêth Garmai,³ from the village of Hâshâ,⁴ was an expositor there. Now when the blessed Mâr Kâ-m-Îshô^c⁵ went down to Mâhözê,⁶ he died there. And this Sergius was a disciple of the holy Mâr Jacob, and he departed while⁷ Rabban was alive, [and went] and dwelt in Nêrbhâ dhë Bêth Gazzâ,⁸ in the cells which

And at the entreaty of Rabban Jacob, the blessed Sergius composed a history of the noble deeds and praiseworthy acts of the holy men who had lived in the country of Bêth Garmai, and this book which he composed is to be found everywhere, and the histories contained in it make the reader marvel, and excite praises of God in him. And he called his book the "Destroyer of the Mighty"—now he called it thus because he did not write about the great men who were in the Church, but rather concerning those who triumphed in the houses of their fathers, and in the church¹ of their native villages, in simplicity of mien and despising of self,—and from the name of his book he himself was called, "Destroyer of the Mighty". The holy Mâr Îshô'-yahbh, and Rabban Kâ-m-Îshô' were also disciples of his, but I shall not speak here concerning them because they have histories which are set down in their proper places, together with those of their brethren, further on, and because the record of them, together with the necessary particulars [of their lives], would require that I should be able to speak without stint.

And he zealously attached himself to the things which conduce to a divine manner of life, that is to say, to abstinence, and fasting, and watching, and prayer, under the guidance of Rabban [Jacob]. And it is well known also that he felt the sweetness of the holy life, which is grafted on to spiritual conviction, from the reflections which he made in his works upon the venerable ascetic life. Now he wrote two volumes on the various exercises of the monastic life, and a book of "Consolations" is also attributed to him, and other works on various

He was one of the members of the Mission sent to Heraclius A. D. 628, and on his way back became a convert to Jacobite views, a fact which caused great scandal in the Nestorian Church. ² This statement of Thomas of Margâ is supported by historical evidence. In the eighteenth year of his reign Khusrau "liess die Einkünfte aus den Steuern seiner Länder sowie allen sonstigen Einnahmequellen zählen, und da berichtete man ihm, dass seine Einkünfte aus der Grundsteuer und den andern Quellen sich in diesem Jahr in gemünztem Gelde auf 420 Millionen Mithqâl an Gewicht beliefen, was, 10 Dirham auf 7 Mithqâl gerechnet, 600 Millionen Dirham macht" (about 294,000,000 marks or 360,000,000 francs). All this money was brought into the treasury at Ctesiphon, where became old, the blessed Mâr Yazdîn,¹ the head of the believers, died, who had crowned himself with earthly greatness and heavenly glory, and it was for him to inherit and enjoy the paradise of heavenly joy. And Khusrau forgot all the good deeds of Mâr Yazdîn, and seized all his wealth and possessions, and he dismissed Shamṭâ and Kûrtâ, his truly believing sons, worthy of blessing, and from being rich, they became poor, and from being men of rank, they became of no account. Now when the blessed Shamṭâ² saw that the wickedness of Khusrau the foolish king increased and was added unto as he became older, he rose up secretly, and went down to Mâḥôzê, the royal cities,³ and he slew with the sword the twenty-four⁴ sons of Khusrau

Now because³ of his avarice and greediness,⁴ Khusrau had disbanded his troops⁵ and sent them away, and the blessed Shamtâ went in⁶ to the palace of Khusrau with his servants, and slew him with the sword;⁷ and there was rest for the churches in all quarters, and by the command of

when a synod had been assembled, all the fathers entreated the holy Mâr Bâbhai to be Catholicus; but he would not accept the office at all, for he preferred to end his days in his cell in the monastery to becoming head of the monastery by strife. [p. 64] And the Catholicus and some of the Bishops accompanied him in honour to his monastery, and when they had parted in peace, and had gone away to a distance, suddenly the holy angel of God appeared to Mâr Bâbhai in the form of a horseman holding a fiery sword, mounted on a white horse. And he stood in the space before his cell and spake with him, and said, "Since now thou hast excused thyself from the office of Patriarch, and another standeth therein, grant me permission to follow him." Mâr Bâbhai said to him. "Who art thou, master?" The angel said to him, "I am an angel commanded by God, the Lord of all, to minister unto the patriarchal throne of the East. As long as thou wast the vicar of the Catholicus, from the first day even until now, I never departed from thy side; but now it is necessary for me to cleave to him that hath received this office." Rabban said to him, "If I had known that thou wast with me, I would, with all care, have accepted this great work; but now depart in peace, and pray for me;" and the holy angel was hidden from Rabban's sight. May the prayers of Mâr Bâbhai, and of all his companions be a high wall to the holy Church, and to her children, Amen! And here I bring this book to a close in order that its end may be sanctified by the memory of the holy Mâr Bâbhai.

BOOK II.

CHAPTER I.

[THE BEGINNING OF THE BOOK].

Now as the beginning of everything which existeth is poor and weak in comparison with the end thereof, which is built up little by little,—even as a child is first of all trained in simple things, and little by little he acquireth growth and increase of power and stature, and as when the command was given to Adam, that he should not eat of the fruit,¹ the world continued for a long time in a state of childhood without progress² to manhood, for the gift of the Law by the hands of the blessed Moses³ was more excellent than that which was given to Adam, for the latter was written upon the tables of the heart with the knowledge of nature, but the former was added with ink, after the manner of books,⁴ and also the perfection which is according to the wisdom which is in Christ, the Lord of our life, and which surpasseth all ancient laws and commandments, was given in after times according to the measure of the perfect Man—so also was it in respect of the

[ascetic life of the] divine man Mār Jacob; in the beginning it acquired through him beauty, through the perfect sons and glorious heirs of his manner of life, but at the end it was crowned with glorious increase and growth.¹ So also in the matter of the kingdom of the wise man Solomon, although it gained more might and glory than the kingdom of the blessed David, yet the kingdom of David received no disparagement, inasmuch as that of Solomon was established by the prayers of David, and by the promises made to him; so also although the congregation increased, and the Monastery of Rabban Jacob became more glorious under the dispensation of his children than it was during his own life time, this fact did not induce any diminution of his holiness which had existed before, but made it [p. 66] rather the more glorious, for the growth and prosperity of disciples give joy to diligent teachers. So also the double portion of the spirit which the blessed Elisha received more than his master, did not bring upon the marvellous Elijah² any loss of greatness, but rather made manifest his glory, when he said, "Thou hast asked a great deal, nevertheless what thou hast asked shall be to thee."³ Thus the glory which came upon this holy monastery under the holy Mār Īshō'-yahbh, and the blessed Rabban Kām-Īshō'⁴ increased the glory of their spiritual father. Now in their days the number of the monks in this holy assembly amounted to three hundred men. with pride to show forth the greatness of his monastery in the sight of all those who were assembled. And it came to pass that at that moment the blessed Jacob was in the refectory, and [Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh] sent and called him, and commanded him to go up to the pulpit and read the psalms. Now there was present with Mâr Catholicus a great doctor who had gone out to the porch of the temple to meditate upon the heads of the subject which he wished to treat in a learned manner¹ in [his] exposition of the Gospel. And when the divine man Jacob had begun to sing the psalm, the sweetness of his voice so greatly attracted the attention and mind of every one, that the eyes of all were fixed upon him and were looking at him. And when he had finished his psalm and had come down [from the pulpit], the doctor cried out with a loud voice, saying. "Fie upon thee, young man, for the sweetness of thy voice and the beautiful manner of thy singing have driven out of my mind all the thoughts which I wished to gather together"; and as the time had come Rabban Jacob went out to his cell.

Now God, who foreseeth what is for the benefit of the community, in that the blessed Rabban Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh,² the monk, and head of the monastery was dead, and the brethren of his monastery being troubled by reason of the absence of a man at their head,—now Rabban Îshô-yahbh at the hour of his death had himself said to them, "Be not afflicted, my sons and brethren, at my separation from you, for behold our Lord will move the blessed Jacob, a monk of Bêth 'Âbhê, and he will come to you, and will be a head to you"—stirred up against him foolish jealousy by the hand of certain men, such as was stirred up against the blessed Jacob his [spiritual] father in the Great Monastery [of Îzlâ], and he went forth secretly and departed to that holy monastery. And the sons of this monastery were greatly vexed and afflicted on his account, and wished to make him come back here. OF THE CASKET OF THE BONES OF THE APOSTLES WHICH MÂR ÎSHÔ^c-YAHBH BROUGHT WITH HIM [FROM ANTIOCH], AND PLACED IN THIS MONASTERY.

Now while these holy men who have been mentioned above were passing through the city of Antioch, and while they were resting in one of the churches of this city in which they tarried many days, [p. 71] Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh of Bêth 'Âbhê saw a white marble casket upon which was the sign of the adorable Cross, and to this, united to the chariot of its honour, were two figures of cherubs. And he saw the mighty deeds which were wrought there by means of it, and he learned that there were inside it some of the bones and portions of the bodies of the blessed Apostles,² and being hot with all the desire of his love for that casket in which these were laid, he offered up prayers to God, the Lord of all, and frequent entreaties, that concerning the petition which they had moved. And when the blessed men Mār Īshō^c-yahbh and Mār John excused themselves, for they accounted the sight of that wicked old man as the sight of the Devil himself, Sâhdônâ, as it were relying upon his own enlightened understanding was so bold as to go in; and when his companions¹ entreated him not to cross [the threshold] he would not be persuaded by them. And they say that when he had gone in to the monastery to the old man, and had seen his grey hairs and age, [p. 73] he bowed his head under his right hand; and thus, they say, the understanding of Sâhdônâ became corrupted from the true faith which he held. And little by little, with the progress of time and changes, Sâhdônâ wrote books for those who denied² the correctness of the opinion that there are two natures and two persons in one created form. And when the holy Mār Īshō^c-yahbh of Adiabene arose as Catholicus, he expelled Sâhdônâ from the Church,³ according to the prophecy which had been [made] concerning him by the holy Rabban Bar-Idtâ the ascetic in very truth.

OF MÂR ÎSHÔ^c-YAHBILH [iii], THE CATHOLICUS, AND OF HOW HE WISHED TO ESTABLISH A SCHOOL IN THIS MONASTERY.

Now as soon as Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh had become Catholicus and Patriarch, and had received all the fulness of the holy things, and the sacerdotal garments which are given for the glory and advancement and perfection of the holy Church, by the election of the Holy Spirit, the cause, and giver, and perfecter of all her sublimity, he showed forth diligent zeal and care with all the solicitude which it is right should be manifested by sons for the paternal inheritance of the house in which they were reared. And he built in this monastery a splendid temple, at great expense, and with the participation of the holy and blessed in all things, the blessed Mâr Sabhr-Îshô^c, Metropolitan Bishop of Bêth Garmai, and of Mâr George, his disciple, the Metropolitan of Adiabene,² [p. 74] concerning whom we will afterwards speak, and of all the Bishops of this diocese of Âthôr³ and Adiabene, the temple⁴ was consecrated and beautified with all holy things.

And Mâr Catholicus said to them, "It is not necessary for you to be angry at a matter which would bring you honour, and which would expand and increase the glory of this monastery. For since two excellent things, as it were two effectual powers, viz., the one being practice, which is the learning of the Divine Scriptures, and the other being spiritual contemplation, which is established by the working of the mind and understanding, would be perfected in this place, this monastery, the house of our fathers, would become a mirror of deeds to be emulated by the wise and diligent, and the congregation of monks would increase by reason of those who would be instructed in doctrine in the school. And, moreover, I have the power [to build] for two reasons which must overcome all obstacles; first, because I have adorned and endowed this monastery with property and earthly possessions, Îshô^c obtained the headship of the monastery, saw that they were irresistibly compelled to depart from the monastery, because they were not able to withstand Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh, they together with seventy solitaries belonging to this congregation, made ready with one accord and at night, unperceived by Mâr Catholicus, they went into the martyrium, and took away the coffin of the holy Mâr Jacob their spiritual father. And thus weeping, and crying, and murmuring, that they should never again see this monastery, and that their departure was for ever, they all went forth up above Herpâ, a village of Saphsâphâ, prepared to build a monastery in which they might lay Rabban Jacob, and where they might continue the course of their ascetic life and end their days. And they had made ready to bring stones and had prepared materials for the construction of a temple and cells, and those blessed men did not perceive that God would shortly bring them back to the inheritance of their father Jacob.

CHAPTER X.

OF THE VISION WHICH MÂR ÎSHÔ^c-YAHBH SAW ON THE NIGHT IN WHICH THE BRETHREN TOOK RABBAN JACOB AND DEPARTED.

Now although the over-zealousness of the will of Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh was not praiseworthy in the sight of these holy men, and appeared to them to be a hindrance,—as indeed it was,—to their ascetic manner of life, nevertheless it appeared that the zealousness¹ of will of the holy man might at the end result in a beautiful ending, and he, therefore, determined to make it a good thing, however much it might be displeasing to the monks. And the Lord Christ Himself¹, who saw the thoughts of both parties, on the one side Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh wishing to build a school for the increase of divine doctrine² and spiritual growth, and on the other, the monks fleeing away from this for the sake of love for Him, that in quietness, and without any disturbance, they might take pains to please His Lordship, even as the Ashimonian³ desert in which they lived taught them to do, showed Mâr Catholicus on the night in which the holy men went forth, when he was lying on the bed of his holiness, half asleep⁴ and half awake, a vision in which a large eagle, strong of body and long of pinions, and having many eaglets upon his back, went forth from the martyrium where Rabban Jacob was buried, and flew away from the monastery towards the north; and he heard the noise of the twittering and the chattering of the eaglets which were upon his back as if their food had been taken away from them. And he woke up with a start and the dream and the vision which he had seen made him marvel and wonder. And he called for the sacristan by the hand of his disciple, and he came to him, and before he could question him the sacristan said to him,

“A short time ago the head of the monastery and Bêrâz Sûrên came with seventy men, and they took the body of Rabban Jacob and departed; [p. 78] and behold the whole congregation is making ready to depart from this monastery after them.” And when the blessed Mâr Îshô'-yahbh heard these things, he knew that what he wished to do was not the Will of God, and he rose up on that day and wrote to the holy men to come back to their monastery. And he departed to Kuphlânâ his village, and he built there the school which he had prepared to build in this monastery; and those blessed men turned and came back to their cells.¹

¹ Soon after the expulsion of Sâhdônâ from the Nestorian Church, and the quarrel with the monks of Bêth 'Âbhê, Îshô'-yahbh found himself involved in a serious dispute with Simon the Metropolitan of Rew-Ardashîr (See Nöldeke, Geschichte der Perser, p. 19) in Persia and of the Ẓaṭrâyê, who refused obedience to him as his diocesan, and who held views which were not pleasing to him. Our knowledge of the reasons of the dispute is limited, and can only be obtained from a series of seven letters which Mâr Îshô'-yahbh wrote to Simon and the Bishops of Persia, and to the monks and Church of Ẓaṭar, a district on the Persian Gulf near Baḥrên. In them he argues the disputed points with considerable skill, and more than once refers to his own work Huppâkh Hushshâbhê, ܘܫܫܘܢܐ ܕܗܘܫܫܘܢܐ (in Arabic عكس الآراء B. O., iii. 1, p. 137), or “Refutation of (Heresetical) Opinions,” and they, like the letters which he wrote concerning Sâhdônâ, are excellent examples of his epistolary compositions. The full text of these letters is given at the end of this chapter; and for a complete list of his letters see B. O., iii. 1, pp. 140—143. In addition to these works he wrote “Exhortations for beginners [in the ascetic life],” thought by Assemânî

they were written by their hands there. Now Abbâ ʿĀnân-Īshŏʿ having lived the life of an ascetic with all excellence, and having his mind constantly fixed upon the works of the ascetic fathers, determined to go and worship in Jerusalem. And from there he went to the desert of Scete,¹ where he learned concerning all the manner of the lives of the ascetic fathers, whose histories and questions are written in books, [p. 79] and concerning their dwellings, and the places in which they lived. And when he turned to come back he made his journey by way of the [monastery of the] holy Mâr John, Bishop of the Scattered, of whom I have made mention a little way back,² that he might be blessed by his holiness,³ and enjoy his conversation. And after he had come to his own monastery,⁴ he took his brother, and they came to this monastery [of Bêth ʿĀbhê] by reason of the annoyance and contention which had taken place there, for certain men who were slanderers, and who set themselves against holy men, had risen up there, and they drove out the holy Rabban Narsai, the disciple of Mâr Bâbhai, who finally became head of the monastery⁵ and was renowned for a life of excellence. And concerning Mâr Narsai the holy Mâr Īshŏʿ-yahbh, when he was Bishop of Nineveh, wrote a letter to the Great Monastery, blaming them, and saying, "Ye have not acted rightly towards that [holy] man in making him a stranger

Now when the blessed Mâr Îshô'-yahbh the Catholicus departed this temporary life,² the holy Mâr³ George became Patriarch after him.

CHAPTER XII.⁴

OF THE BLESSED MÂR GEORGE,⁵ THE CATHOLICUS.

This holy man Mâr George came from Kaphrâ⁶ in the province⁷ of Bêth Gâwâyâ, which is in the⁸ country of Bêth Garmai; he was the son of rich and noble parents, and his father possessed in this country [of Margâ] two estates, Tellâ dhě Zâllê, that is Tell-zallah, and Bêth Habbâ,¹ and he was sent by his parents to watch and govern the affairs and business of these estates. [p. 81] And when he went into the monastery to pray and to be blessed by the ascetics and those who dwelt therein, their manner of life was pleasing in the sight of the blessed man, and he also wished to inscribe himself with the seal of their divine service. Now according to what I have learned from his kinsfolk, who possess written records of him, he became a disciple after the death of Rabban [Jacob], and the time itself shews us that it must have been subsequent to this event, for at that period he had not yet arrived at the age for being a disciple. It is probable that he received the tonsure before Rabban Kâm-Îshô^c received the office of head of the convent. And when his father departed from this world, George entreated his brethren that the village of Bêth Habbâ might be given to him as his share in the division of the inheritance, and he gave it to this monastery [of Bêth 'Âbhê]. Now when the blessed Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh was Bishop of Nineveh he saw the intelligence and good disposition and humility of the young man George, and was drawn to love him as the blessed Nectarius² loved Evag-

And when Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh became Metropolitan of Adiabene² he took the excellent and humble George with him; and when Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh became Catholicus he made him Metropolitan of this country (Margâ) in his place. So also when he became Patriarch this same Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh was appointed general governor of the dominion of the countries which were far away.³ And he had many disciple and intimate friends, and one of them, George,⁴ he made Metropolitan of Përâth dhë Maishân,⁵ and another George, to be distinguished from our George, he made Metropolitan of Nisibis, by whom was composed the hymn of praise for the consecration of a church which begins: —

OF THE HUMILITY AND GENTLENESS OF THE HOLY GEORGE, THE CATHOLICUS, [AND OF GEORGE THE METROPOLITAN OF NISIBIS].

Now since this holy man had, from his youth up, placed himself under the yoke of the humility of Christ, and had held himself to be of no account in comparison with what was excellent, and in his own opinion³ had set himself below every [other] man, he did not meditate within himself and consider, saying, “I am a [distinguished man], the Catholicus, [p. 83] and I myself have power to despise him that despised me, and I can make a mock of him that held me in contempt,” even although he had the power to prevent and put an end to his ministration, until he should come and apologize, and manifest penitence for his haughtiness.

And moreover, that humble head [of the Church] was not moved to wrath by any of these things, neither did his exalted position overcome him, who while standing as the head of the Church, and as a mighty fountain from which holiness flowed down to all ranks, nevertheless made use of that justice which alone is fitting [before] God: on the contrary he meditated wisely and he judged mercifully, in that he listened to our Lord, Who said, "Whosoever among you wisheth to be great, let him be last of all men, and a servant of all men."¹ And he rose up lovingly and he went to the city of Nisibis to reconcile to him George the Metropolitan, who was angry and wrathful with him. Now the entry of Mâr Catholicus into the church of Nisibis was arranged to take place when George and all the city were gathered together in the temple at the time of the Mysteries² on the first day of the week. And when the Metropolitan who was in the pulpit, saw the Catholicus coming in at the door, he came down from the pulpit, and went out of the temple, and departed to his cell. Now when he had done this thing, the people of Nisibis were ashamed, and they were exceedingly grieved and angry with their Metropolitan, and they went up to him forthwith, and said to him, "How is it that thou art not ashamed to do this thing? How can we esteem thee a shepherd and a head whilst thou despisest all the toil, and trouble, and humility which Mâr Catholicus hath shewn thee? Thou must know, however, that unless thou yieldest thyself to be reconciled to him and art penitent for thy two acts of folly, [p. 84], namely in treating

him lightly in Mâhözê,¹ and also at this present in our city, we will neither be thy people, nor shalt thou stand at our head;" and being compelled he came down, and they each expressed their contrition by bowing to each other to the ground. And Mâr Catholicus said, "Why hast thou raged and cut asunder the bonds of fatherly subjugation? and why hast thou turned aside the shoulder of humility from the yoke, and hast disturbed the order which is incumbent upon the paternal throne?" The Metropolitan said to him, "Our Master, Mâr Îshô'yahbh, of holy memory made² a testamentary deposition that I should be Patriarch after him, for I was a very servant working before him, and I have trodden all Persia on his missions." The Catholicus saith to him, "It is true that thou hast travelled in obedience to him, but I was reared upon his holy knees. He it was who made me wise in holy doctrine, and he it was also who made me Metropolitan of the country of his fathers, and I have laid my hands upon his eyes, as Joseph laid his hands upon those of his father Jacob.³ If thou hast worked before him he hath rewarded thee by making thee Metropolitan of the high place of the world, Şôbhâ;⁴ this should be sufficient for thee and it is twice as much as thou hast deserved. For what merits which thou possessest could he have given thee the patriarchate? Or was it, peradventure that when thou didst find that we were humble, even as we are commanded to be, thou didst wish to magnify thyself against us, like the company of Kûrâḥ (Korah) and

May God³ the Lord forgive us all, Amen.” Thus by his humility Mâr George reconciled George the Metropolitan, and he bound on the crown of victory, and the happiness which is reserved for the humble is reserved for him in heaven. [p. 85] All these things, O beloved Mâr ‘Abhd-Îshô’, I have learned from the ecclesiastical histories of the saintly Mâr Athken,⁴ who was called “Plucker out of his beard,” of the Great Monastery [of Mount Îzlâ].

OF ANOTHER GEORGE [METROPOLITAN] OF PERÂTH DHË MAISHÂN, WHO WAS ALSO ANGRY AND WISHED TO LIFT UP THE HEEL AGAINST MÂR CATHOLICUS.

As soon as George of Nisibis had been reconciled, and Satan saw the profound humility which the Catholicus had manifested in respect of him, and the long road of trouble and afflictions which he had borne, he could not endure to leave that blessed man without other pain and anxiety even for a short time. Now when the Catholicus went down to Mědhînâthâ dhě Bêth Armâyê, he heard and learned also concerning George of Pěrâth dhě Maishân,³ how he was bringing accusations against him before the heathen, and also that he was making ready to offer resistance to him. And although this also made trouble for him, he went down to make peace, and to make of none effect the crafts of the Calumniator. Now when he arrived at [Pěrâth dhě Maishân], George left that place and departed to 'Âḳôlê.⁴ And since that holy man [George] was armed with humility against all Satanic assaults, [p. 86] he went to take refuge with the spiritual man, Rabban

And after these things Mâr Catholicus went down to Bêth Ketrâyê² that he might reconcile the inhabitants thereof, for they had cut themselves off from obedience³ to the episcopal throne of Rêw-Ardashîr,⁴ which is Persia; and he went to the island of Dîrên,⁵ and the people thereof were also reconciled. And we may learn concerning the depth of his doctrine and the height of his wisdom, from the address of prayer which he composed, and which begins:—

“Whose goodness never changeth. . . .”⁴

³ Mâr Abhâ was originally a Magian. He was baptized at Hêrthâ and he studied at Nisibis and Edessa. He was elected Patriarch A. D. 536, and shortly after began to teach at Seleucia. Owing to a dispute with Khusrau I. Anôshârwan (531—579) he was banished to Âdhôrbâigân, but he returned to Seleucia where he was thrown into prison by the king, and died A. D. 552. His body was carried to Hêrthâ and buried, and the Nestorians style him Mâr Abhâ the Martyr. For a list of his works see B. O., iii. 1, pp. 75—81. See also Bar-Hebraeus, *Chron. And he composed for it mournful tunes which were to be accompanied by beautifully arranged instrumental music.

OF RABBAN SABHR-ÎSHÔ^c WHO WAS SURNAMED RÔSTÂM.²

This Rabban Sabhr-Îshô^c who was called Rôstâm, the beloved friend of the holy fathers who lived in this holy monastery, and the composer of histories of them, came from Hĕrem, a village of Adiabene. He was a venerable and holy man, and from his youth up had been a disciple in the Great Monastery of the holy Rabban Mâr Narsai, the head of the monastery. And when he had been there a short time, the fathers who were there asked him, and he wrote [a tract] on the occasion of the celebration of the Golden Sabbath³ Eve; he also wrote a lengthy work, in elegant language and with a clear mind, which consisted partly of disputations against heretics, and partly of arguments against obscure opinions of various kinds: And he departed from thence and came to our monastery, and when he had tarried here also a short time, the monks from the holy Monastery of Bêth Kōkâ⁴ came after him, and through their entreaties, and the counsel of the Elders of this congregation [who gave it] for the benefit of that holy monastery, he sorrowfully departed from here. He wrote also another book in eight discourses on the dispensation of our Lord, on the conversion of the various countries by the hands of the blessed Apostles, and on chastity and ascetic life. [p. 90] He also composed at the request of the holy Elders who were here, but especially of Abbâ Ƙardâgh, who occupied the same cell as Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh [of Adiabene], the history of Rabban Mâr Îshô^c-zëkhâ,¹ of the Monastery of Gaṣṣâ; the history of Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh; the history of Rabban Mâr Abraham, the head of this monastery, who came here from the monastery of Rabban Zëkhâ-Îshô^c;² and of Rabban Ƙâm-Îshô^c.³ He also composed the history of Mâr Abraham of Nephthar,⁴ of Rabban Mâr Job the Persian, and the history of Rabban Sabhr-Îshô^c [the founder of the Monastery]⁵ of Bêth Ƙôḷâ.⁶ Thus with the sweat of his toil in the vineyard of Christ dropping from his brow, he departed from this world, and his soul had rest. And to me when I saw in his writings the love with which he burned for this holy house, it seemed good to make pleasant this history with the venerable memorial of his uprightness.

OF RABBAN GABRIEL, [THE HEAD OF THE MONASTERY], WHO WAS SURNAMED THE "COW".

Among the chapters of this our history, O our friend and master, Mâr Abhd-Îshô^c, we will also recount the history of the venerable Gabriel, who was rapid in thought and zealous for glorious deeds. This man sprang up,² according to the body, in the country of Siârzôr,³ but it did not please him to remain in that place like a savage deprived of the instruction of doctrine, and he set out from thence and came to the city of Nisibis, where he laboured and acquired the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. Now this man also was a disciple in the Great Monastery of Mâr Abraham [on Mount Îzlâ], and he toiled in the learning of many books, [p. 91] and his mind was diligently trained in controversy and in disputation against heresies. Especially, however, did he take up arms against the "shorn" followers of Severus of Antioch⁴ who lived in the Monastery of K̄artēmîn,⁵ and he had much controversy with them, and [he composed] answers to them which burned up the evil stubble of their hateful doctrine.

⁵ The ܕܥܘܕܐ ܕܩܘܕܝܫܐ was founded before A. D. 500. See Assemânî, Dissertatio de Monophysitis, B. O., ii. p. lxxiii. It lay to the east of Mardîn, in the district of Tûr 'Abhdîn, which extended from Gezîret ibn 'Omar on the Tigris to Mardîn. See

And when Sâhdônâ was driven out of the Church, he went after him to Edessa,—as he himself testifies, saying, “At that time, when the wretched Sâhdônâ was expelled from the Church, I, Gabriel, blazed with the burning zeal of my soul, and I went to Edessa to him,”—and there he held a controversy with him, and defeated him. And when the holy Mâr Narsai, the head of that holy monastery, departed from this temporary life to the life which endureth for everlasting, this Gabriel composed the history¹ of his noble deeds, at the end of which he wrote, “It is sufficient for me to say in praise of Rabban Mâr Abraham and his congregation, that the holy Rabban Jacob, the founder of the monastery of Bêth ‘Âbhê, went forth from it, for the Lord hath built by his hands the king of monasteries;” and from then until now this passage hath been handed down in all places, and Bêth ‘Âbhê is called the “king of monasteries.” Now he was head of the monastery there for a short time, but he departed from thence and came to this monastery. And when Rabban Kâm-Îshô^c departed to his dwelling place, the blessed Bêrâz Sûrîn² rose in his place; and when he also departed, the blessed Mâr Bar-Şaumâ—to whom Mâr Hênân-Îshô^c wrote a letter at the beginning of his holding the office of Patriarch—rose in his place; and when he also had completed his days, Rabban Gabriel became the head of this holy monastery.³ And he composed a discourse on washing the feet, [p. 92] which was read on the day of the Passover of our Lord, and he wrote a history of the noble acts of the holy martyrs of Ṭûr Běrà'in,¹ and narratives of various kinds. Now that discourse which was referred to in the commemoration of Rabban Jacob does not, strictly speaking, belong to this Gabriel, but it was composed by Mâr Gabriel, Metropolitan of Karkhâ dhë Bêth Sělôkh,² who was called "Gabriel the Dancer," and concerning whom we shall write when we come to his place.³

OF RABBAN MÂR ABRAHAM THE HEAD OF THE MONASTERY

forth. And one steward and governor and guardian ordered the affairs of both monasteries, and the monks of that monastery did not act in any way without the command of the steward who was elected from this congregation, nor did the monks here oppose in any way the commands of the steward elected from that congregation, for it was a matter which excited the praise of God with all men. And this thing was rumoured among all the monasteries of this country. And although both Rabban Jacob and Rabban Zëkhâ-Îshô^c came forth from that holy monastery in Mount Îzlâ there was neither division nor severance of love on account of this. So also when the blessed Mâr Abraham had been borne to the rest of the grave, like a shock of corn in its season,¹ and the standing corn at its time [of harvest],² this arrangement,³ that one steward and governor should minister unto both these holy monasteries, continued for a long time after him.

OF ABBÂ SIMON [WHO WAS SURNAMED] THE "BEARDLESS."²

I entreat the wisdom of wise and understanding readers, that as they advance in the study of this book, they may hold me entirely free from blame should it appear [to them] that one narrative is in advance of its correct position, and another is after. For not all narratives will admit of being written down in chronological order, lest peradventure the root of history being severed, the narrative should lean³ to one side, and become like an animal which tries to walk upon two⁴ of its four legs, a thing which it is not in any way possible to do. What then?

Now in the time of Mâr George, the Catholicus⁵ and Patriarch, of holy memory, there lived in this our monastery an old holy man who was called Simon, on whose face, according to what is written by his fellow because he had been absent there a long time, and because everything concerning him was a joy or a sorrow to this holy congregation,¹ when all the holy Elders heard of his coming to the paternal throne of Bêth Aramâyê,² they decided to send suitable men to meet him and to salute the father of fathers. And they all entreated this honourable head of the monastery, Abbâ Simon, to be the agent by whose means the homage due to his holy fatherhood might be conveyed to him; and this holy old man undertook to do so gladly, and he and others went down to the gate of the Patriarch. And when they had gone in to the city of Ḥadhattâ,³ [p. 96] a certain God-fearing man received them into his house, and he and his wife were childless,⁴ like the God-fearing Shunammite woman⁵ and her husband, to whom, from the time that the prophet Elisha entered into their house, God gave a son through the prayers of the prophet. And when Abbâ Simon asked those aged people how they did, they revealed to him that they had no child at all to be the heir of their old age; and the holy man gave them some water in which he had washed the cross which was upon him, and said to them, "Behold, God will give you a male child, and his name shall be called John;" and he went down to the door of the father of fathers.

And the Holy One set him apart, like Samuel, from his childhood, and accounted him to be His own, and made him a member of His household. And when this child had been born to his truly believing parents, whose lives rejoiced in him as in the air which they breathed, (for he was the light of their consolation), with great watchfulness and care for him they placed him in a school;⁵ and because the Lord knoweth His own, and worketh effectually that He may be known of them, he learned in a short

And when he was some few years old, when as yet he had experienced neither the motions of the body nor the importunities of the passions, he forsook those old people, worthy of blessed memory, and everything, and came to this holy monastery. Now although many have written histories about this blessed man, especially Abhû Nôh,¹ who resteth among the righteous, I will relate briefly a few matters concerning him. It would seem that his coming [to this monastery] took place in the days of the holy Mâr Abraham, him of Bêth Rabban Zëkhâ-Îshô^c, as I will shew at the end. Now that same Divine grace which brought the child into existence through the prayers of the holy Abbâ Simon, placed him at the door of his cell, so that just as he had been the cause of his birth, so he should also be the guide and leader of his early manhood in each sublime step of the ascetic life. And when Abbâ Simon knew who he was,² and whence he came, and the cause of his coming to the monastery, for the young man informed him concerning these things little by little, his affection went forth to him, and he loved him much, even as Jacob loved his beloved Joseph when he saw³ him. And when the [other] holy Elders had learned how he

He wrote the "Solution of the Kûr'ân," ܩܘܪܥܢܐ ܕܩܘܪܥܢܐ, a "Disputation against heretics," and "other excellent works", among which was, probably, the History of John of Dêlûm. See *B. had been born, because of the majesty of that holy old man and the honour in which he was held in this congregation, they offered no opposition on account of his youth to his receiving the tonsure. [p. 98] Now when he had become a disciple he was set to do the work of the monastery, and to be the keeper of the vineyard of the monastery which was situated in Dûrê,¹ a village of Naḥlâ dhě Malkâ;² and he continued in this service a long time living nobly a life of excellence, after the manner of the Elders who had led a monastic life from their youth up. And he made for himself of the vine branches in the vineyard a little hut³, in which he tended the vines and watched and laboured the whole time that he was there, and in which, to this day, mighty deeds and healings of sicknesses are wrought by the prayers of that holy man. And the believing and God-loving people of that village testify that they had recourse⁴ to him in every affliction, and having asked for the prayers of that holy man, rest and deliverance were afforded unto them. And the venerable old man Elisha relates:—"When I was sent there by the monastery to be the keeper of the vineyard, the marks of the fingers of the blessed man still remained in the plaster of mud with which he had plastered that cave. And when I was in the vineyard by myself,⁵ and there was no man with me, the Kartëwâyê¹ came against me to carry away the iron tools and the provisions which were with me; and when I perceived that they were breaking down the hedge and coming through into the garden, I cried out to Mâr John [to come] and help me. And I saw an old man of lofty stature who appeared to me standing at the door of the cave, clothed in glorious and shining apparel, and when I saw him gladness came over me. And he deceived those thieves with apparitions² and he hid the cave from them, and having sought much for it, and finding it not, they departed and went away. Thus the Lord protected me and all that was with me by the prayers of that holy man." [p. 99] Now that blessed man planted a nut tree there, and nuts like unto those which it produced³ were not seen upon any other tree there, and although they took many [cuttings] from it, and planted them, they never produced⁴ any tree. And, as it is written concerning the prophet Samuel, "It was heard⁵ from Dan even to Beer-sheba that Samuel was to be a prophet of God,"⁶ so also was this word spoken⁷ concerning this man by reason of the miracles which he wrought from his youth up.

OF THE FAMINE WHICH TOOK PLACE IN THEIR DAYS IN THIS COUNTRY, [AND OF THE DEPARTURE OF JOHN AND HIS MASTER TO NÊRĚBHÂ OF BÊTH-GAZZÂ.]

In the book which was composed by David, the pious Bishop of the Kartěwâyê, which is called the "Little Paradise,"² which begins with the history of Rabban George bar-Şayyâdhê,³ the head of the monastery, in the history of Abbâ Şĕlibhâ the Aramean⁴ it is made known that a great famine took place in this country. Now from this passage it would seem that the blessed Mâr John [did not]⁵ receive the tonsure at the hands of Mâr Abraham, because at the time of this famine the blessed Abraham was dead. And when the famine had become very severe, and there was no help to alleviate it from anywhere, Abbâ Simon, who had three disciples, one of whom was our blessed John, gathered them together, and said to them, "Come, my children, let us depart from this place and go to the country of the mountains, and let us eat the leaves of the trees and not die;" and he took them and they departed to Nêrĕbhâ dhĕ Bĕth Gazzâ,⁶ but some say that they went to the country of Salakh.⁷

[p. 100] And while they were thus living upon the berries of the trees, and were being directed by the blessed old man to the saving of their lives, the time of the departure of Rabban Simon drew near and arrived. And as Jacob called his sons,¹ so he called his disciples, and said to them, "Come, my children, my doctrine is to me, and I will tell you what things will happen unto you after my departure from this world." And when the first had drawn near him, he answered and said, "Thou shalt take to thyself a wolf;" and to the second he said, "No man shall follow thee, my son, or know the way in which thou shalt depart from the world;" [and to the third he said], "As for thee, my son John, behold, our Lord will magnify thee with miracles and signs, and He will make thee a head and a chief in the congregation of the brotherhood of ascetics, and thou shalt teach the heathen barbarians;" and these prophecies of the holy man came to pass to the three of them, according to what is written in his history.

CHAPTER XXV.²

OF HOW RABBAN JOHN WAS TAKEN CAPTIVE BY THE BARBARIANS.

Now when that holy old man had departed this life, and his three disciples remained behind in his cave, one of them took the books which their blessed master had written and went down to the villages to sell [them], and to bring back food for them [all]. And when he had seen the world and the fairness thereof he took unto himself a wife; this is the man who took unto himself a wolf. Now when the two other disciples who remained behind had waited for some days, and their companion did not return, the second one went down to see what had become of him that had gone first, and he likewise did not come back, and it is not known what became of him; it is said of him, however, that he became an anchorite in the inner mountains. And when the excellent John saw that he was forsaken by his two companions, [p. 101] and that they were not, he also went down to see what had become of his two brethren. And according as the event happened and [by the working of] the Divine Providence that brought the holy man in the way to be the means of fulfilling the prophecy concerning himself, the men of Dêlûm¹ went forth to spoil and to make a raid upon the country where the blessed man was, and thus they also carried him off into captivity, and brought him to their country. Concerning this holy man these [facts] must suffice, for very many and great things are written concerning him.

CHAPTER XXVI.

OF RABBAN JOSEPH THE HEAD OF THE MONASTERY.

Now according to what we have learned from the history of this holy Rabban Joseph, he came from the country of Shâhrâzûr,² and was a kinsman of the blessed

And when he heard of the golden¹ Book of the Gospels which our Mār Īshô^c-yahbh,² the blessed in everything, had bequeathed to this our monastery, he came with all his insolent pride to take it and to carry it away with him to Mědhînâthâ dhě Bêth Armâyê.³ And when he had come unto the monastery and this assembly had received him joyfully, even as they were wont to receive the other Patriarchs who had come for the worship and honour of the place, he demanded of Rabban Joseph, the head of the monastery, that he should bring him that Book that he might rejoice in the sight of it. Now when he had done so, for he had no power to withhold it, and moreover, he did not comprehend what was in the heart of the Catholicus, he brought the Book from the Library and gave it into his hands. And when the Catholicus saw the splendour and beauty of the Book, which was ornamented with pure gold, and precious stones, he was devoured by desire for it, and he took it and laid it in his wallet.⁴ Then the head of the monastery answered and said to him, "Thou art not acting rightly in taking our Book in this iniquitous⁵ manner." And the Catholicus said, "Ye solitaries have no need of this Book, therefore let the believers enjoy it;" and straightway he commanded those that were with him [p. 103] to set out on their way quickly. Now when this had taken place, the board for summoning the congregation was struck,¹ and those among the ascetics who were young and strong ran after the Catholicus and stopped him, even as David did Gûlyâdh (Goliath),² and they prevailed against him with stones and sticks. And when they had come up with him they threw him off his mule, and they buffeted him with outspread hands and closed fists in an unseemly manner although they had it in their power to take the Book [from him] without striking a blow. Now the abandonment [to this treatment] was wrought upon him by God because he coveted that which was not his own. And when the aged Elders heard what had been done to him by the novices, they gathered themselves together and went forth to appease the Catholicus, and they began to apologize for what had taken place without their knowledge and consent; and in this manner they pacified Şëlibhâ-Zëkhâ, and he departed from them.

headship of the monastery, and dwelt quietly in his cell. And when the brethren of the Monastery of Rabban bar-'Idtâ heard [of this], inasmuch as they had neither head nor guardian, they came after the blessed man, and thus at their entreaty, and by the advice of the Elders of this monastery, he went and became the head and governor of the monastery, and ministered in that office with all the ability which the headship required.

to] be the more glorious, and so that their glory may increase!

Now Abbâ 'Ānân-Īshô^c, of whom I have written above,¹ had a nephew whose name was John, and he was a disciple in this monastery during the lifetime of his uncle. And after the death of Abbâ 'Ānân-Īshô^c, together with the inheritance of his manner of life and his doctrine, he inherited his cell and every thing that he had. Now all the books which 'Ānân-Īshô^c and Īshô^c-yahbh his brother wrote and left behind them, this John made to pass into the library [of this monastery]. And having formed within himself all those glorious qualities by which a man is sanctified for living the divine monastic life, for he had been born of parents who sprang from a blessed stock, in body and in spirit, he at length became the head and governor of this holy monastery. And the fame of his piety was carried into all places, and he was ordained Bishop of the country of Bêth Běghôsh.² And when the blessed Mâr Simon the Metropolitan departed this temporary life, the choice of the Bishops and of the government,

In the eighth century of our era the seat of the Bishop of Běghâsh was in the Church of Bai [see infra chap. xxxix (text p. 125, l. 3)], probably Ẓal'a-i-Bai, the residence of Melik Beg, one of the first Kurdish princes of the Sambo dynasty, who with the help of the Syrian Christians in the fortress of Dîz obtained the rule over the Ḥakkârî region. and of the believing men of Adiabene fell upon him, and he was ordained Metropolitan by Mâr Şëlibhâ-Zëkhâ, the Catholicus, concerning whom we have written a little way back.¹ And while he adorned the office of head with all steadfastness, he made his body to abstain from everything which was pleasant, and he neither consented to drink wine, nor submitted to eat unclean things. And all transient glory was a polluted thing in his sight, because he had been nourished in a life above all reproach by the overflowing abundance of the doctrine of the holy and pious ‘Ānân-Îshô’, and he nobly preserved to the end the teaching of his uncle and master. And because of his love for this holy house, [p. 107] every day, so it is said, he used to sit in his cell and quietly meditate. And in the days of this holy man the inhabitants of Bêth Bôrê, a village in [the district of] Nineveh, built a fine and beautiful temple at great expense; now they had [over them] a pious Bishop [called] Ephraim who came from this holy monastery. And when they wished to consecrate that temple, Ephraim came to this monastery to Mâr John the Metropolitan, and at the request of the Bishop and of the believing people of Bêth Bôrê who were with him, he (Mâr John) went and consecrated that holy temple. And so after he had continued to be the head of the monastery for a long time he died in this holy monastery, where he had been born of the Spirit and instructed in everything, and where he had been

And behold, according to what I have learned from the old men, his grave is by the door of the screen¹ of the martyrium. Now although the martyrium in which he was buried with the fathers, was demolished for the sake of this new temple which was built, nevertheless he and the other holy Metropolitans and Bishops were left in their places undisturbed. OF MÂR ÎSHÔ-ZĔKHÂ, THE SYRIAN, BISHOP OF SALAKH.

it, it nevertheless appeareth to me that I ought to speak of his noble deeds and triumphs among the righteous phalanx of his companions. This blessed man came from the country of Bêth Armâyê,¹ and according to what I have learned from the ancients, he was a monk in this holy monastery. It is said of him that his food daily throughout the entire year consisted of seven² mouthfuls which he passed into his stomach. And he made his soul a bird which was accustomed to fly upwards always, the object of the vision and meditation of which was beyond its body, and in his renunciation he was free from every distracting influence. And his cell was situated in Gâr Kâhnê,³ according to what I have learned from Rabban Matthew the Elder, who heard it from his master Abbâ Mâran-Zëkhâ.⁴ [p. 109] Now when Mâr John became Metropolitan of this church province, and the Bishop of the country of Salakh had departed from this world, they appointed Mâr John to be bishop there. And when he had gone into this Outer Salakh⁵ which is called Salakh of Narses,—

And Jacob¹, my father according to the body, related to me, and he had heard it from his fathers, that in the district called Bêth Shârônâyê² in which our village was situated there was a great, old oak (?), which was called the "king of the forest;" [p. 110] and in the villages round about it there were heathen who used to burn incense to it, and who worshipped before it, and we wished to cut it down, but we were afraid of the heathen who worshipped it, and also of the devil which appeared therein. Now when we heard of the coming of the pious Mâr Îshô³-zekhâ into our country, and concerning the vine which he withered by his coming, when he had drawn near to the villages round about us, our priests went to bring him to us. And we commanded them that in coming back to us with the Bishop their way should be by the side of that tree, and they took that way. Now when the Bishop came near to the tree and saw its beauty, which was caused by the exceeding care [shewn] to it, and learned that it was the god of the heathen who dwelt in these villages, without coming down from the animal³ upon which he rode, or the matter causing him any astonishment, he lifted up his eyes and hands to heaven, and cried to the Lord, saying, "O Lord of heaven and And¹ there was a village in Inner Salakh which was called Gôlâi,² the inhabitants of which were formerly Magians, and having become disciples of the doctrine of Christ they built a church in their village, and set apart certain nut trees and a small plantation³ that there might be [always] a sum of money for the maintenance and expenses of the church. Now when those old men died, their children seized the nut trees and defrauded the church of what assistance they afforded.⁴ And when the holy man went to that village, the priests of the church there complained⁵ of being defrauded by their fellow villagers. [p. 111] And while the two parties were disputing with each other, the priests saying, "These trees belong to the church," and the laity contradicting [them], and saying, "This has never been so," the Bishop said to the [priests], "Dispute ye not one with another, for I believe that the Will of the command of Christ, the Lord of the Church, will, if those nut trees truly belong to this church, bring them to the court yard of the church, without damage and without injury, in order that your dispute concerning their misappropriation may be rebuked." [And to the villagers he said,] "If those nut trees are yours, they shall remain just as they are without injury, in the place where they are." And that Will which maintaineth creation by its might, and to which are easy the things which are difficult to us and appear to be impossible, heard the voice of the son of its house, and brought all those nut trees near to the church. And there was there a poor old woman to whom the men of the village had given as long as she should live the half of the produce of a large nut tree which was among those trees to provide her with food. And when the sacristan rose up to beat the board¹ to summon the congregation for the office of the night, behold, he saw that all the nut trees had come round about the church, and in his joy he went to where the Bishop was sleeping to announce to him the departure of the trees; and the Bishop said to him, "I know it [already], my son, be silent." And when it was morning, and the people had heard this report, the whole village was gathered together to that place, and they rose up with wonder and praise, and they marvelled and wondered, and glorified God. They saw, moreover, that the tree upon the half of the produce of which the old woman used to live, was divided into two halves, and that one half had come² to the church with the other trees, and the other had remained in its place. [p. 112] Now many other things were wrought

Bâbhai was stirred up to become the cause of the going forth of many from that monastery without the will of God, for if it had been so, not one of the holy men would willingly have taken upon himself the labour of founding a monastery. Moreover, Sâhdônâ, who lived at a time nearer to that dispute, in his history of Rabban [Jacob],¹ praises and magnifies and glorifies that holy monastery. And behold, this also we would make known, that although the blessed Rabban Kâm-Îshô^c,² and the holy Mâr Jacob,³ and Rabban Aphnî-Mâran,⁴ and Emmâ⁵ Leontius Zînâyâ,⁶ and Rabban Joseph⁷ went forth from the monastery in like manner by reason of a dispute,⁸ and became heads and governors in other monasteries, they neither called nor named this monastery a "monastery of madmen." And again Gabriel wishing to magnify this monastery, abuses its inhabitants and in his passion saith concerning the person of Mâr Jacob, [p. 114] "He left to them, that is to say to the monks, no possession in the land, and of everything which they possessed, that is to say the estates which their fathers Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh the Catholicus,⁹ and Mâr George¹⁰ the Catholicus, bequeathed to them, behold they are entirely destitute." And again he saith, "No person is so utterly destitute of everything as they are, and although they labour, that is to say, although they gather in and carry out, in seed

much as the righteous live with Him and are not dead, and for their sakes He keepeth the covenant, and performeth grace, and sheweth care for the thousands of generations, according to the word of the Lord,¹ the righteous men of old, and the just men who came after them, and the holy men who come last, are the children of His kingdom, even as the living and life-giving mouth of Jesus our God² maketh known, saying, "Many shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the south, and from the north, and shall sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God."³

Now in respect of the fatherhood of the holy Mâr Jacob, we may see that the promise of the word of the Lord was fulfilled. [p. 115] For although he worked and laboured and strove in all the various works of the ascetic life, and loaded to the full the ship of his own person [with] all manner of riches and sent it forth to heaven that it might enjoy its good things in the times of need, he nevertheless raised up governors of all those who have been and who will be imitators of him in the place of his dwelling, and of his manner of life, namely, these holy men whose histories up to the present we have been shewing forth. Now among these was this marvellous and holy Mâr Aḥâ, this glory of ascetics, and object of praise of [spiritual] shepherds, this canon of all beauty of those who hold the five of the Egyptians; the beauty of David¹ used to drive away the wicked spirit from Saul, and the beauty of Daniel² and his companions quenched³ the flame and stopped⁴ the mouth of the lions: not only with the beauty of the body, but with two-fold and double beauty, for to the visible and apparent beauty which nature had given them, and which grace had bestowed upon them, [p. 116] they united also that of the soul and mind which is prepared for the will of God.

Thus also was it in the case of this governor [Mâr Ahâ] concerning whom my feeble discourse is about to speak. And thus have I heard from those who recount his glorious deeds, that together with the splendour of his acts and the glorious brilliance of his doctrine, he shone with the radiant beauty of a fine stature and a noble presence, and he was also born of believing and God-loving parents. Now this village of Awâkh was very famous for its fear of God, and concerning its church it is said that there were seventy priests in it at one time. And it came to pass that the blessed Mâr Ahâ and another brother called Shûbhâhâl-Mâran were left orphans, for their father died when they were little children, and the believing woman their mother brought them up until they arrived at years of discretion; and they went forth from their village and came with their mother to Shalmath, a village of Saphsâphâ,⁵ and entered the school there. And they were maintained [there] by the labour and care of the of the mind, and that word which one of the holy men wrote was in very truth fulfilled in him, "Now in the time of youth doctrine groweth up together with the soul and is mingled with it. And it dwelleth in silence for a long time working in the two parts, [that is] in the spirit and in the body, according to the ordinance of the fathers. By its labour in the body it giveth to the needy, and receiveth strangers, and by the things of the spirit it shineth and enlighteneth." And he was directed and was guided [until]¹ necessity drove him to the headship of the monastery and he drew near to subdue it.

CHAPTER XXXV.

OF THE ELECTION OF THE BLESSED MAN MÂR AHÂ TO THE HEADSHIP OF THIS HOLY CONGREGATION.

Now when the blessed Mâr John, the head of the monastery who preceded him, was elected to the episcopacy of the Apostolic throne of Bêth Běghâsh,² and this congregation remained without his fatherly care, and without a man to succeed him and to stand at its head, Mâr Ahâ knew that the election to the headship by all the brethren was ready to fall upon him; and he left his cell, and hid himself secretly in the monastery³ for many days. [p. 118] And when [the consecration of] the blessed John was completed by Şëlibhâ-Zëkhâ the Patriarch, he came here; and when he asked concerning Mār Aḥâ, and they¹ said, "He has fled", he adjured his brother Shûbhḥâl-Mâran to find him wherever he was. And the brethren went to seek him, and they brought him out of the secret place² in which he had hidden himself, and thus by the ordinance of Mār John, and at the entreaty of the whole brotherhood, the blessed Mār Aḥâ, who was beautiful in appearance and beautiful in mind, stood at the head of the planets, the children of the angel of light, Mār Jacob. And he walked in all the modest manner of life which befits the humble, without ever thinking within his pious and lowly soul that he was the head and governor of the monastery. And while he entrusted to others the business of the management of the internal affairs of the monastery, and of going to the gate of princes, he himself, according to the custom of the other governors who were before him, sat quietly in the patriarchal chamber. And according to the tradition of his uncle,³ there used to be sent to him each evening from the refectory, one single kind of food, without much water in it, and it was not even prepared specially for him, for it consisted of ordinary bread and a little onion with some water. And thus the ship of his humility travelled on, with a guiding wind blowing and with its swift sails⁴ bellied out, and it flew on and passed through all the storms which sink ships and destroy wealth without regard. And the venerable old men, who received it from their masters, have told us that when he came into the congregation,¹ and stood at the head of the rows [of monks], from the beginning of the service until it was ended, he neither lifted up his eyes nor looked upon any man, but that from the beginning until the last 'Amen' he kept his eyes continually bent down to the ground in front of his feet, and upon the top of the sandals in which they were. And he made his passions submissive slaves, and he brought them under the yoke of order from the time that he was a novice; [p. 119] and he made his soul to possess good habits, so that not even between himself and his soul, did he make free with his body, even as his master Abbâ Isaias² commanded him. And thus all the time in which he ministered in the office of head, the sons of his congregation were in need of no teaching, for the holy sight of his person sufficed, as in the case of that brother who, together with many others, used to go to Abbâ Antonius³ each

And when Abbâ Antonius asked him, while all the other brethren were asking questions and gaining instruction, saying, "My son, how long hast thou been coming to me thus? and why dost thou depart in silence?" that brother said to him, "It is sufficient for me, O father, to see thee, that is to say the sight of thee maketh me wise, and [teacheth me] to emulate thy manner of life." Even so did this our holy father become a mirror of divine beauties to all those round about him, and while the eyes of all his children in this congregation were looking upon him, heavenly splendour filled his person like that of an angel. And they too became benefited, and their minds were quieted, and they became wise by [following] his holy example.

OF THE ELECTION OF THE HOLY MÂR AĦÂ, THE HEAD OF THIS MONASTERY, TO THE OFFICE OF METROPOLITAN.

Now when our all blessed father Rabban Mâr AĦâ had excelled in these and such like things, and had led this holy congregation towards heaven for many years, the blessed Mâr John our Metropolitan, [p. 120] forsook the habitation with creatures of dust, and was united with and rested among the companies of spiritual beings; and in a good old age, and [after] a life of Apostolic deeds he was gathered to his fathers. Now certain people who were chief among the believers of Adiabene, namely, the *dahkânê*¹ and noblemen, having had

And because they had elected Mâr John from this monastery, they decided with one accord, saying, "So far as it is possible for us we will not have a head⁴ over

And they went down to the holy father of-fathers, Mār Abhâ the Catholicus,¹ and brought a letter of prohibition² of the blessed Rabban Mār Aḥâ, and thus he was of sheer necessity obliged to go down and receive the consecration³ to the great work of the Metropolitanship of the countries of Âthôr⁴ and Adiabene. And when he came up to his country the believing men of his diocese received him as an angel of light, and as the Apostle Simon Peter. And when the blessed Mâr Aḥâ left the headship of the monastery, and was exalted from glory to glory, and passed from strength to strength, according to the [words of the] Book [of Psalms],¹ he ordained that the blessed Rabban Îshô^c-yahbh should be his successor, and that he should be the guardian of this holy congregation in his stead. And finally, after many years, after the death of the holy and pious man, the good servant of Jesus Christ our Lord, Mâr Abraham, Bishop of Nineveh, Îshô^c-yahbh, the head of our monastery, was made Bishop of the city of Nineveh² by the hands of Mâr Aḥâ; and concerning this Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh I will relate many things at the end [of this history].

soul and added to the acts of his ascetic life. So then, by the might of his prayers, I will write down the rest of this history which is to follow, and I will show forth to my supine companions those pillars of light [who] went forth from this holy congregation, the histories of whom have been allowed to fall into oblivion by the slothful, (of whom I myself am one), and have not been written down, and behold it is many many years ago since thou, O beloved of his Lord, and friend of His saints, Mâr ‘Abd-Îshô’, didst with all manner of wrestlings and supplications require of me to set before thee in writing those things which I had been accustomed to sow in thine ears. But I was not¹ persuaded to do this, for two reasons, firstly because [the writing of] histories brings upon those who compose them severe labour, and secondly because of the cessation from daily work, and the constant urging of the mind [which is necessary] to produce and bring forth into remembrance the deeds and glorious acts [of holy men], which have been laid up in its store house for a long time.

Now when [this Mâr Aḥâ] was a child and was in the school of the village of Shalmath,² he saw a dream in which he was clothed in the garments of the priesthood, like a bishop, and was attired with the mitre,³ and held the episcopal staff. And he was

And a man, exceedingly glorious, stood up above him, and answered and said to him, "Behold, since thou art weary and fatigued, rest thyself from thy labour and trouble in this temple;" and taking the dress of ministration off from him, he said to him, "Sleep now until I call thee." Now in his youth he did not understand this vision, but when he had received the office of chief priest, he remembered the dream and meditated upon it. And when Rabban Simon, the holy teacher who finally became Bishop of Bêth Běghâsh,¹ was building the temple of the village of Shalmath of stones and lime, the holy Mâr Aḥâ came according to his custom to visit that village like the others. And he passed the night in the temple there, while it was yet unfinished, and a vision was shewn unto him twice,² the first time dimly, but the second time exceedingly clearly; but what manner of vision it was I have never learned. And on the morrow, when that holy teacher went to him he asked, "How much hast thou spent upon this temple?" and Mâr Simon said, "I have spent so much and so much." Mâr Aḥâ said to him, "How much more then, according to what the builders say, of him and they did not flee away from him, as in the case of that blessed man of whom it is written in the [Book of] Paradise, "He prayed to God that the beasts might be at peace with him, and it was so."¹ And again, "He prayed that the fire might also be at peace with him, and it was to him even as [he had prayed]. And he used to gather sticks of wood, and set fire to them, and go up and sit upon them."² For when the heart of a holy man³ is cleansed from these five kinds of sin, namely, the love of money, and gluttony, and the lust of the body, and anger, and pride, these five brethren⁴ who were with that rich man who was suffering tortures in hell, even as one of the saints made the comparison,⁵ all creation will be found to be friendly to him, both irrational animals⁶ and noxious reptiles; even as we may learn from the histories of holy men, as for example, that of the blessed old man Simon⁷ who was ministered unto by a lion; and that anchorite in the history of the triumphant Mâr Mîlles⁸ with whom a serpent lived, and whom it did not hurt, who made the angels his companions and helpers. But why should I speak of angels since he was the abode of the Trinity, the Lord of the worlds? Now this blessed man, according to what we have learned, they sustained¹ in this monastery, so that for the sake of his love for God, he loved the food of animals and their companionship and their habitations. And he was also accustomed, according to what is said of him, each morning, which was the season of the day in which he took his food, [p. 128] to light a fire, and to boil water and to pour it upon the roots and over the dry crusts of bread with which he used to sustain his life. Now this was his food, and this was the season of the day in which he partook of it; but whether this was actually the case or whether he did this wishing either to conceal his manner of life or to be held of no account, I have neither been able to understand, nor have those who related this to me been able to decide. And his neighbours being stirred up with anger and burning with wrath, said, "How can this most aged man lengthen out his life in prodigality?" Now from the mere sight of the fire did they come to this conclusion,² but of what his food consisted, and of what he had within his cave they knew nothing. And every time they came to the monastery³ they repeated their re-proaches against that old man and complained of him, saying, "The proximity of this old man leadeth us down and bringeth us to the depth of a lax and dissolute manner of life." And once, the holy Mâr Aḥâ the Metropolitan having consented, they brought before him an accusation against that holy old man, and he answered and said to them, "Go ye after him and bring him [here], but take heed that he doth not flee from you." And when they heard this they leapt up [the mountain] with light footsteps, and they came up with him and laid their hands upon him, and one of them took his turban, and threw it over his neck, while the others pulled it down from behind,¹ saying in a scoffing manner,² "O foolish old man, how long shall we bear reproaches for thy sake? Didst thou³ not know that justice would at length rise up in judgment against thee? Hasten thy steps, for the judge awaiteth thee." And without answering them a single word he drew near and came to the spring which we call 'Rabban's Spring', [p. 129] and he saw round about it a flock of wild goats, and he said to them, "Peace [be] with you, O dwellers in the wilderness, children and companions of my habitation! While we were living together in peace ye did not deny my fellowship with you, neither did ye set yourselves afar off from my company. Behold, I am justly taken captive by the righteous, because like you, I eat my meal in the morning; now since your [manner of] life⁴ and food is the same as mine, come and let us go together to the judgment chamber, so that when the judge seeth that we are many, he may spare us because of our number, for it might happen that he would not shew mercy upon one despised creature; come then in the name of the Lord." Now while the brethren marvelled at these words which were not those of a demoniac,¹ and [saw]² the animals, which came running towards him, lifting up their feet and wagging their tails on all sides round about him like dogs when they see their masters afar off, surround³ that holy man, they let go their hands from him, and entreated his pardon for what they had thought; and when they had knelt down and prostrated themselves before him and had risen up they could not see him at all, and thus he passed out of their hands, and where he went and where he died until this day no man knoweth. And when the brethren came to the Metropolitan in grief and sorrow and shamefacedness of conscience which rebuked them, and made known to him what had happened, he was exceedingly angry with them, and he answered and said to them, "While the other monks who were your predecessors in the place in which ye live, made that holy old man the type and pattern of all correctness of life, and took refuge from all their trials and temptations in his prayers, and were delivered, you who come after them, [p. 130] and who dwell in the caves and desert of holy men, hath Satan stirred up with a foolish and empty zeal, that he may not allow you to look upon the correct lives of holy men in a proper manner. and blessed men with blemishes. But God our Lord will require of you the priceless pearl which ye have destroyed out of this monastery by your error. Moreover ye ought to be ashamed of all this wickedness which ye have wrought, in going to the place of the little hut where he lived, and prying into the manner in which he prepared his food. I, however, warned you away from there, saying, Take heed that he doth not escape out of your hands; and I urged him to work many great and divine things before you to put you to shame, the like of which no man has ever wrought in our time.”

CHAPTER XLI.

OF THE BLESSED MÂRAN-ZĒKHÂ, BISHOP OF ʔADHATTÂ AND OF THE BISHOP WHO PASTURED CAMELS [WHOM HE FOUND].

Now when the holy Metropolitan Mâr Aḥâ was sitting on the holy throne of the church of the city of Ḥadhattâ,¹ the pious and glorious and blessed Bishop Mâran-zĕkhâ, the disciple and fellow-worker of Rabban Aphnî-Mâran, was accustomed on the holy days of the fast² of our Lord to go out and pass them in silence

Bishop Mâran-zĕkhâ fell down before him and affirming with oaths, said, "I will not rise up until thou dost promise me that thou wilt not hide from me who thou art;" and straightway the pasturer of camels said angrily to him in Arabic, "Rise up, master, what hast thou to do with me? depart in peace from my place."¹ And Mâr Mâran-zĕkhâ protested to him with an oath, saying, "If thou shouldst kill me I will not rise up until thou tellest me thy history. If thou art an Arab² as thou sayest [by thy speech], where didst thou learn this hymn of the Resurrection of our Lord which very few men are found to have ability enough to sing? and why were thy arms and face turned towards the east?" And when that holy man heard these things, and saw that he had been snared by his singing the hymn and the oath which that holy man had laid upon himself, he answered and said to him, "Swear to me, yea or nay, that if I do this I shall not be honoured in thine eyes, and that thou wilt not come to me continually, [p. 132] and that thou wilt send nothing to me." Now this he said knowing that he should speedily depart from this world as soon as any man perceived him. And he answered, saying, "Behold, Master, forty years ago I was appointed Bishop of the Scattered who were in the land of Egypt.³ And when I had ministered in

And those Arabs who dwell in tents came and surrounded me, and while every one else escaped, I remained because I thought that they would do me no harm; and they took me captive and brought me to their tents, and appointed me to be the shepherd of these camels which thou seest. And since I have determined¹ that this [work] is the will of our Lord, and also that it does not in anything separate me from a life of purity, and I am not brought in contact with them [i. e., the Arabs], but am alone by myself in the desert, I praise God continually, and I remember that many of the saints were shepherds, and I am comforted. And as for this hymn which thou didst hear to-day, behold I am accustomed each day to perform the service of one festival of the Lord, and to watch, and to-day I performed the service of the Resurrection of our Lord, and I lifted up my voice in the hymn as if I had been standing in the temple before the altar of our Lord. And now, behold, for forty years I have been as thou

seest me, and our Lord hath protected me from all evil, and [the Arabs] have accounted me as one of their elders and as one of their brethren, because they found me upright and obedient. And I have received from them no compulsion to sin in any way; and I wait for the end of my life, which shall be completed according to the will of the Lord." Now when the holy Mâran-zĕkhâ heard these things, he wondered greatly and marvelled, [p. 133] and he was moved to tears, and that [other] holy man wept in company with him. And he answered and said to him. "Master, I will go back and bring money (zûzê)¹ and will give it [to thee] for thy deliverance, for I cannot leave thee in this ignominious and lowly condition." And that blessed man said to him, "Depart in peace to thy manner of life and to thy quietness, Mâr Bishop, and disturb not thyself with any of these things; for if during the whole period of the time which has gone by, I had wished either to escape or to sell myself, I could have done it. And moreover, this [work] in² which I am [occupied] is the will of God." And he urged the Bishop, saying, "Go in peace; and on Palm Sunday when thou goest down from the mountain to thy city, thou shalt come to me and shalt see me." And when the Bishop went again at dawn on the Sunday aforesaid, he saw a man in the place of that man, and thinking that it was he, he went up to him. And when he had seen him and saluted him, he asked him, "Where is the old man who pastured these camels

a short time ago?" And he said to him, "He is dead." And the Bishop was grieved with a great and bitter grief, and said to him, "When?" and he said to him, "During these [last] days." And the Bishop took a turban cloth from his body and gave to the man, saying, "Take this, and go and shew me his grave, for I am his friend." And when he had gone with him and saw the grave afar off, the Bishop made the Arab leave him, saying, "Go now to thy camels," so that he might have the opportunity to weep. And he sat down upon the grave, and wept bitterly, like the widow who had buried her only son,¹ and he said, "Alas, my brother; alas, my brother! Why didst thou hide thy departure from me, and why didst thou not permit me to enjoy the sight of thee, but didst send me away from thee as the blessed Paul sent away Abbâ Antonius?"² And the blessed Mâran-zëkhâ rose up and went to Hâdhattâ, and kept the festival of Palm Sunday according to custom.

[p. 134] And on the second day of the week he invited the assembly of the priests, and many believers, and said unto them, "Come, let us go to the desert and bring from there Elijah; come with me to the wilder-

Now when they had gone forth in fear with that holy man their Bishop, and had arrived at the place where the grave was, they began to say the prayers and the service for any dead person.¹ And when they had performed the service of the dead for a whole day and the night which followed it, they began to dig up and uncover the grave, but they did not find that holy body. Now they found two woollen cloths,² one which formed the clothing which he put on, and the other the covering with which he covered himself [at night], but he himself hath disappeared unto this day; and in all sorrow they took these garments and went away having put the earth of the grave back in its place. The children of men were unworthy to have near them the bodies of these men who possessed neither bed, nor pillow,¹ nor seat, nor candlestick, nor table; the earth was their bed, their knees were their tables, and herbs were their food.² The belly did not overcome them by its greediness; lust did not set them on fire with its ticklings; the blanket³ of sickness never weighed them down; [p. 135] they never needed the medicines of the children of Galen because of the weight of their luxurious and dainty food. No Eve ever visited them and used her blandishments upon them;⁴ they never tasted the [fruit of the] forbidden fig tree⁵ which is sweet to the palate of the children of Adam; they never sweated behind the plough in the toilsome labour which bringeth forth thorns; they never offered their offerings in the neighbourhood of a Cain to be envied and slain;⁶ they never drank wine and exposed their shame⁷ and became a mockery unto a Canaan which was [only to be] perceived by the mind,⁸ for their blessed Mâr Aḥâ appointed as his successor the venerable Sergius, [p. 136] a monk and ascetic from this congregation, who was trained in the Scriptures, and who was enlightened in the understanding of them. And he pastured his flock piously with all the humility which befits the governors of the flocks of Christ; and during some small disturbance which took place in his country through a raid of the inhabitants of Dêlom¹ who came to Salâkh and Hĕnâithâ, he took all his books and came here, hoping for the repose of peace and of refreshing of spirit; and thus being insufficient for that which was expected [from him], he ended his life, and was also laid in this monastery of the house of his fathers.

OF HÛGAIR² THE BELIEVING NOBLEMAN, AND OF THE MONASTERY WHICH HE BUILT.

There was a believing man, whose name was HÛgair who belonged to a noble family. And he built a monastery between the village of Bâshôsh and Shalmath,³ not with a godly will and intention, but rather for boasting and pride. And wishing to emulate good and prosperous men, he named the monastery by the Persian name of "HÛgair-Âbâd," after the manner of the Magians from whose race he had sprung. Now when he had made it ready with all things, he wished it to be consecrated by the holy Mâr Aḥâ, and he waited for the time of his coming to this country; and when he had come Hûgair entreated him to take the trouble to go up with the teachers and scholars, and to sanctify the monastery which he had built. But the holy Metropolitan Mâr Aḥâ saw with the eye of the spirit that the Lord desired not this any more than the sacrifices to idols, and he answered and said to all those who were near, [p. 137] "This Monastery of Hûgair-Âbâd is ruined while it is yet new;" and he left it in its unconsecrated condition, and departed. And it was not consecrated afterwards, neither did the praise of the glorious Trinity ascend in it, and the remains of its building are well known and stand to this day.

CHAPTER XLIV.

OF THE DEPARTURE OF THE BLESSED METROPOLITAN MÂR AḤÂ FROM [THIS] TEMPORARY LIFE.

Now I was preparing to add [to the history of] the noble deeds of the holy Mâr Aḥâ [some account] of the excellent work which he did in the Church of God in respect of the two Patriarchs who lived in his days, I mean the Catholicus Sûrîn,¹ and the Catholicus

¹ Sûrîn seized upon the patriarchate A. H. 1065 = A. D. 754 and held it for fifty-six days. "He sat after Mâr Abhâ, and came from Seleucia. He was not guarded in his manner of life. He was formerly Metropolitan of Nisibis, but was translated to Ḥalwan (i. e., حُلْوَان = بَيْدَس, Calah). He was deposed in the year in which a Catholicus was appointed". Bar-Hebraeus, we had formerly the intention to speak briefly about him as about his companions, I have passed over all these [as] extraneous matters, and come therefore to speak of the mournful end of his days. Now when he had arrived at the village of Shalmath on his visitation, he knew and felt also that he had arrived at the limit of the silence of his life, and through a short illness to which corporeal beings are subject, [p. 138] he like the [other] children of Adam lay down and slept the sleep of death. And according to the revelation and visions which had been upon him in his youth and old age, his venerable body was laid in that holy temple which is in this village. And he was a haven of help to all those who took refuge therein, and may God the Lord of all, through his prayers order that we also like him may depart from this world with fair renown, while lifting up praise to the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, now and always and for ever! Amen.

Here endeth the Second Book.

Now the blessed brethren of the monastery of Bêth 'Âbhê have completely set aside and made to slip from out of the fingers of our history the account of the holy Mâr Mâran-'ammeh,¹ the Metropolitan Bishop of Adiabene, and it hath not been embodied² in our feeble lines because they exhorted me to crown with my discourse only such holy men as have lived in that holy monastery, and to omit [all] others. But this is not pleasing in thy sight, and by thy divine command thou hast required of me that I should also compose a history of that blessed man, and set down in writing an account of him based upon that which is handed down by word of mouth, that it may be joined to the equipage³ of the histories of the governors who lived thou art standing on the highest point of the ladder of knowledge of the wise like an old man,¹ and art inciting me to collect the stories, and pieces of information, and the triumphs of holy men, that thy soul may pleasantly meditate upon them, and that thou mayest make it to possess a pattern and an example of spiritual things, and mayest enrich it with the understanding which is above this world. Now the abundant virtues and the good and glorious qualities which are stored up and which flourish in thy noble self compel² me, with great regard to thy distinguished command, to paint for thee in writing³ a picture of the glorious acts and deeds of that man worthy of all good things, the Metropolitan Bishop Mâr Mâran-⁵ammeh. At the same time also, according to thy wish I will write briefly concerning the coming of the blessed and enlightened teacher, Mâr Bâbhai, to this country, and of the schools which he founded. And I will set down in consecutive order what I have learned from the Elders whom I have met, and from⁴ these things which are already written down, and I entreat and supplicate God the Lord of all to manifest His working in me the ignorant and unlearned,⁵ and may the praise of His Godhead increase in the mouth of the reader, and in the ears of the listeners, through those things which are about to be written! And may the help and blessings of His grace cling to thee, as the cause of, and as the one who encouraged the writing of the histories of those who loved Him, and who did His will. First of all, however, as thy wisdom requireth, we will speak concerning the blessed Rabban Bâbhai, and of the schools which he founded, and of his restoration of those which had fallen into decay for want of teachers and of people to care for them. [p. 141] And afterwards I will rehearse in plain language my history of the noble acts of his disciple, the chief priest, Mâr Mâran-⁶ammeh, and though omitting to introduce the proofs which the chapters require, so that I may not make the history too heavy, I will glorify them by brief accounts, even as I have praised their companions in short narratives.

Here endeth the Apology.

CHAPTER I.¹

OF THE BLESSED TEACHER RABBAN BÂBHAI.

The holy teacher Rabban Bâbhai was a very enlightened man, and through the healthy constitution of his body, and the knitting together of his limbs, he was a powerful man, and according to what is said of him, had a high, sweet voice like a trumpet. And there clave to him chastity, purity, love, graciousness, humility and exceeding lowliness, and he excelled in [these] last times by reason of these his glorious qualities like the teachers who lived² in the former generations. And the multitude of his virtues magnified his name, and all the rules and arrangements of the schools which through laxity and neglect had been destroyed, were restored by him, and through him [the schools] regained their former glory. He came from a family in the town of Gēbhiltā¹ in the country of Ṭîrhân,² where first of all he laboured in spiritual work, and he begat prosperous children who followed in the footsteps of their parent, and who showed themselves noble heirs of a wise father. It is found that the period in which he lived was in the days of Ṣĕlibhâ-zĕkhâ, Catholicus and Patriarch, [p. 142] and the "Questions"³ of Rabban Bâbhai testify that he made enquiries of Ṣĕlibhâ-zĕkhâ⁴ concerning various matters. And just as among the people of Israel who were in Babylon the Divine praises had fallen into oblivion⁵ and were forgotten,⁶ because according to what is written, they did not know how to perform the praises of the Lord in a strange land,⁷

As in the early Christian Church the musical portion of the service consisted of ψαλμοὶ, ὕμνοι, ᾠδαὶ πνευματικαὶ (Ephesians v. 19, Colossians iii. 16), but I am unable to give exact renderings of the Syriac technical words. Each country, and town, and monastery, and school had its own hymns and songs of praise and tunes, and sang them in its own way, and if a teacher or a scholar happened to be away from his own school he was obliged to stand [silent] like an ignorant man. And as when the Hebrews had gone up to Jerusalem all their hymns and songs of praise which had become corrupt acquired [new] glory and splendour,³ or if thou wishest, as before the time of Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh of Adiabene³ the Catholicus, the orders of the services were performed in a confused⁴ manner in every place, and by means of this man the services of all the churches acquired connected order, so also the Holy Spirit made wise this blessed man, and taught⁵ him beautiful airs, and sweet blendings of melody,⁶ and filled him with His gift, and enriched him with His treasures, and made him a musical instru-

And he founded there twenty-four schools, some of them being founded for the first time, and others being decayed schools which he restored. And since, perchance, there may be some who coming across these lines will consider us to be boasters⁶ and liars, I will mention these schools by their names, even though our discourse should assume at this point an exceedingly vain and foolish⁷ character.

Now some say that he had sixty disciples [who were] teachers, and that he founded sixty schools, and appointed a master to each one of them, and that through the zeal of believing and God-loving men, who made the instruction [of children] in divine things their care, he set apart for them property and funds for their maintenance. And he came back to Kēphar ‘Uzzêl, and twice a year he visited all the schools, in order that laxity of discipline might not enter [into them], and that the musical training⁷ and canons⁸ and orders of services which he had made his disciples acquire might not be destroyed; and thus this manner of singing was called the “musical system of Rabban Bâbhai.”

THE HISTORY OF THE HOLY MĀR MĀRAN-^cAMMEH THE METROPOLITAN BISHOP [OF SALĀKH].

CHAPTER I.

THE APOLOGY.

The triumphs of holy men are the boast of the Holy Church, and the beloved rehearsings of them are a lifting up of the head to her children. Abundant helps for us descend from them, and they confirm in us the love of their Lord. The glorious festivals which we make to them, with whom we expect to receive participation in the kingdom above, and their yearly commemorations, proclaim the praise of that power Who aided them here, Who led them far into His mysteries, and Who entrusted to them the pasturing of His flocks, and with Whom they are there [in heaven] enjoying happiness in the glory which He prepared for them. And, moreover, to those men who here [upon earth] became an altar of prayer, which continually breathed forth the incense of Life, who rejoiced all who were round about them, and who were angels clothed with bodies here [upon earth] it belongeth to speak to God. "And as for me, thou upholdest me in mine integrity, and settest me before thy face for ever."¹ And because I, the wretched sinner, have in my lack of wisdom² made ready to rehearse the triumphs and histories of one of these holy men, I entreat their prayers that I may be near to be helped by them, and that our Lord may grant that I may speak according to the power of my poverty,¹ although it be not that which befitteth the occasion. And moreover He willeth that, according to his power, [p. 148] each one of us should cast his offering before Him, like the two mites² of the widow.³ And by the prayers of the friend of His love, the chosen and holy man concerning whom my discourse dareth to recount the history, may my drawing near to the rehearsal of matters concerning him be a propitiation and not a condemnation for me.

Lord might be with him and might dwell in him. Now in his youth he learned doctrine in the church of his native city. And because at that time Rabban Bâbhai excelled above all others in teaching in the city of Gëbhiltâ, Mâran-‘ammeh left his parents and their possessions and departed to that teacher. And he was trained and directed in all the knowledge of divine things before him, and he became learned and wise. And when the blessed Rabban Bâbhai went up to this country, the blessed Mâran-‘ammeh was the one man out of all his sixty famous disciples and teachers who went up with him; and when he had built schools in the village of Këphar‘Uzzêl, [p. 149] he established Mâran-‘ammeh as the teacher of this village. And the fame of his glorious acts went forth in all this country, because his learning shone with the purity of his manner of life, and he made his body to abstain from every kind of delicate food; now he used to feed himself on bread and a few onions, just sufficient to maintain life. And he lived in this manner from his youth up so that he might not become an object of reproach in his old age, for he had learned that “he who liveth delicately in his youth shall be a servant, and in his latter end shall groan.”¹ When he was a young man the monks his contemporaries held his manner of life to be marvellous, because that in addition to that great labour of the weight of the toil of teaching which was laid upon him, he was able to embrace the laborious life of voluntary abstinence coupled with great strictness of life. And he was a teacher for many years, while the

OF THE EPISCOPATE OF THE COUNTRY OF SALÂKH WHICH THE BLESSED MÂR MÂRAN-^cAMMEH RECEIVED, AND OF THE MIRACLES WHICH TOOK PLACE THERE BY HIS HANDS.

Now there was in the country of Salâkh a holy and venerable Bishop called Mâr Îshô^c-zëkhâ,¹ the history concerning whom I have already written, by whose hands mighty deeds and miracles were wrought in that country, and when he departed this life of troubles and trials for the rest of those who sleep in Christ,—inasmuch as that country abounded in Magianism,² [p. 150] and not only in the worship of the sun, moon and stars, but [the people] in their stupidity offered worship also to trees of beautiful foliage, and this worship of trees existed even in the days of the old man from whom I learned [this],—the blessed Metropolitan Mâr Aḥâ³ was obliged to appoint and send the holy Mâran-^cammeh to that place, for he was a teacher and a righteous man, that by his knowledge and manner of life he might root up the tares from that country. Thus he was appointed, and he set out for that country, having received from the Holy Spirit with [his] consecration [the power] to work mighty deeds and to show forth miracles, while the Divine love which was in his soul, and the great purity of life which he had cultivated from his youth, exalted him in the chief-priesthood and in spiritual workings. Now when he had gone forth to visit [his] districts, he came to a village called Bêth Nĕwâ,¹ and there was in it a man who had brought into [his house] another wife besides his lawful wife. And he called for him to come before him, but he came not, and he required of him to expel the whore from his house, but he did it not. And Mâr Mâran-^cammeh cursed him, saying, "I trust in our Lord that the Divine wrath may come upon thee, and that both thy wives may be widows;" and it came to pass on the morrow that the man lifted up a large butcher's knife² to cut meat, and by the agency of God he smote his left hand, and it fell from him, and all his blood ran out from him and he died, according to the word of the holy man to him; and fear fell upon all those who heard [of it].

[p. 151] And when he learned concerning the lonely condition of that old woman, he was exceedingly sorry, and he commanded that they should bring the body to the church; and he put every one outside, and began to entreat God for the life of the boy. And God, to Whose power all things are easy, Who by the hands of Elijah² and Elisha³ brought the dead back to life, granted to the blessed man his petition for the resuscitation of the boy, and he came to life, and Mâran-^cammeh gave him to his mother; and all the people were stirred up to gladness and to praise.

And there were in the country certain Shahrîghân,⁴ who although they were nominally Christians, made confession that Christ was an ordinary man, and said that "He was as one of the Prophets," and the Bishops who lived in the country laboured among them, but they did not accept the true and orthodox doctrine.¹ Now when Mâran^cammeh had learned concerning them, he went to them on a Sabbath day, that he might keep the first day of the week with them, and pray for them; and he lifted them up with him in the service, while he prayed in his heart to our Lord on their behalf, that He would make His light to shine into their hearts. Now when all the people of the village were in that church, and they had begun [to say], "Light hath dawned for the righteous, and joy for the upright of heart,"² the church and its court were filled with light which surpassed the light of the sun, and all men wondered and were amazed. And the holy man answered and said to them, "Now that Christ our Lord hath shewed you His light, and hath kindled His truth in your hearts, confess ye with us that He is the Lord and God,³ Jesus Christ; or do ye, peradventure, need to see other things [before ye will believe]?" They answered and said to him, "We believe, O our father, we believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that He is God;" and at the time of the Holy Mysteries he absolved them, and they became beloved sons of the Church their mother,⁴ through the wonderful thing which Christ had wrought before them by the hand of His saint Mâran^cammeh. gregation had a mule¹ for riding upon, which had never been subservient to him, and this was very grievous to her owner, for she was a fine and beautiful animal; and he spake concerning her to the blessed man who commanded him to bring her to the church together with her bridle. And the holy man took the bridle, and signed it with the sign of the Cross, and he spake to the mule as to a rational being, and said, "For the sake of our Lord open thy mouth, and take the bit;"² and she opened her mouth and took it in all quietness; and every man was moved to the praise of God.

Now there was in the church of our native village Nehshôn³, a large ant's nest built in the wall, and it was not easy for the believers to root it out, because it occupied the whole wall up to the roof; and, because that church was roofed over and made strong with painted boards and beams, this thing was very grievous unto them, and when the holy man came to them they spake to him concerning this matter. And he washed the cross which he wore upon him in water, and he told them to sprinkle the water on the nest, and on the morrow not a single [ant] was to be found.

Now in those days the Shahrîghân⁴ used to take from the Dahkânê⁵ one half of the corn, and wine, and nuts, and poll-tax, and their oppression was very severe, and their exactions were unlimited,¹ and the Dahḵânê made complaints to their pious Bishop concerning their taxes and their tribute. And he answered, and said to them, "My children, the time is at hand when all these villages and towns will be taken by the Arabs, and all these Shahrîghân shall go up out of the country, and a man whose name is Hîtm bar-Şâlâḥ² shall persecute them and root them up, and ye all shall be subservient to him, because, as it is said, "the iniquitous man shall take vengeance on the iniquitous man, and the Lord upon them both." [p. 153] And this actually came to pass to that country after many years. Now it appears that at that time Hîtm bar-Şâlâḥ was not yet born, but because the spirit of the prophets is submissive to the prophets, Mâran-‘ammeh, by the eye of the Spirit, made known aforetime what was about to happen.

of light, ended his life in the country of Margâ, and his chaste body was laid in the village of Shalmath; and the choice of the whole country, but particularly of Loharsaph (Lohrâsp)¹ and Maslĕmah,² and of the rest of their brethren, fell upon the holy Bishop Mâr Mârân-^cammeh, and he was appointed [Bishop of Arbela] by the blessed Catholicus and Patriarch Mâr Jacob.³ And when he had come and had been received with much pomp and with the honour which befitted his holiness, he went up and sat on the throne of the fathers.⁴ Now certain insolent and thievish Arabs who were in that country had seized upon a mill called Bêth Wardâ,⁵ which formed part of the possessions of the house of the Patriarch, and because the holy Mâr Ahâ died some way off, those Arabs rose up quickly, and with little resistance⁶ called it their own property. And when the holy Mârân-^cammeh had been appointed, he and all the honourable nobles with him worked with every possible means to take it back from those wrongful possessors, but were unable to do so; and when he said, [p. 154] “The mill belongs to the house of the Metropolitan, and is [therefore] my right,” they disputed the matter with him, saying that they would not give it up at all. Then Mâr Mâran-^cammeh answered and said to them, "Since ye thus dispute the matter, and will not put yourselves away from this iniquity, come, let us go to the mill, that we may learn from it to whom it belongs." And those Arabs, although they made a mock at the difficulty of these words, and neither trusted nor believed in the power which was united to the blessed man, agreed to this condition, and went forth with him; and with them there were many Shah-rîghân¹ and Dahḡânê² [who went] to see what would come of his ordering. And [when] they had gone into [the mill], Mâr Mâran-^cammeh answered and said to his opponents, "Since the mill is yours, command it to shew us that it is yours, and then we will leave it in your hands and go away." And they answered and said to him, "Thou must order it to shew us to whom it belongs". He said to them, "If I command it, and it doeth what I have commanded, will ye leave it, and take yourselves away?" And they said to him, "If we see this stone obedient to thy command, then we have no portion in it, and we will depart immediately, and the mill shall be thine." Then Mâr Mâran-^cammeh having knelt down and prayed to God, turned towards the mill, and said, "O stone without feeling, by the great and Divine power of the word of the Lord which is mighty in the height and in the depth, if thou belongest to these Arabs, then according to thy custom, grind flour; but if, on the other hand, thou art not the property of these men, but art the inheritance of the Metropolitan of this country, let what thou grindest be changed to ashes." And when he had said this, ashes began to come forth from under the mill, and the flour disappeared; and every man was made afraid and brought to the confession of God. And Mâr Mâran-^cammeh answered and said to those Arabs, "Now although [it hath happened] thus, if the mill be yours, [p. 155] command it to change the ashes into flour;" but they marvelled and were put to shame, and they emptied their hands of the mill in great disgrace. And Mâr Mâran-^cammeh having given permission the mill changed its grinding of ashes into its usual grinding of flour,¹ and this report flew throughout all countries. Praise be to that merciful God Who worketh for His Church at all times, and among all peoples, and Who hath never left, nor will leave, Himself without a witness,² but Who establisheth in His churches the chosen doers of mighty deeds, and maketh them fathers from being His sons, and Who restoreth by their hands the miracles, and wonderful acts and mighty deeds of the Apostles their fathers!

From Âdhôrbâighân he took Inner Salâkh,⁴ and gave it to the Bishop of Salâkh in the place of the province of Dêbhûr. To Stephen, Bishop of Dâsen, he gave the Great Monastery, and all the province of Naḥlâ and Ṭalânâ,⁵ which belonged to the diocese⁶ of Margâ; and he wrote for him an order that any Metropolitan who should succeed him should have no power to dispute [the matter] or to take it away from the throne of the country of Dâsen. just as in the case of the famines which took place in the days of Abraham,¹ Isaac,² and Jacob,³ those holy men also were participators with the wicked men on whose account the famines arose. What then? Now it came to pass one night that when the holy man was engaged in prayer in the cell in which he lived, that the Angel of the Lord appeared to him face to face, in a glorious and exceedingly sublime vision, and the temple of the blessed man was filled with a beautiful odour. And he was greatly moved, and answered and said to the spiritual being, "Who art thou, Master?" And the angel answered and said to him, "I am the Angel of the Lord who ministereth to this apostolic throne of Arbêl." And the holy man answered and said to him, "What doth my lord command his servant [to do]?" And the angel answered and said to him, "A command hath gone forth from before the Lord to waste and destroy by thy hands a sinful people and a people mighty in iniquity, which is in the country of Margâ, for their iniquity, like that of the people of Sodom,⁴ hath gone up before the Lord, and like them they shall receive punishment in divers ways according to thy command." The blessed man answered and said, "The Lord God is able to destroy them in a moment as He destroyed the hosts of the Assyrians,⁵ [p. 158] how then can my feeble intervention be required by Him by Whose nod the worlds stand, to whom if He appeareth they shriek violently, and at the sight of Whom the mountains reel,⁶ and the earth trem-

Now when it appeared to the holy man thus, [p. 159] and he knew that the word had gone forth from before the Lord, with tears and great grief he secretly left his cell, and went out by night to go forth into solitude¹ remote from all mankind, that he might not be the means by which the matter which the angel required of him [should be accomplished]; and he turned the impetuosity of his course with very rapid steps to a mountain eastwards, having his eyes filled with tears, and prayer and supplication in his mouth. But just as the Lord turned back the fugitive prophet in the belly of the whale² unto the preaching of Nineveh,³ and completed by him that which was required of him, so also did He turn back this fugitive priest, not by means of a fish, but by means of the element¹ of fire did He make him afraid;² and he returned to His service. Now when he had gone on the whole day, without food and without water, he came to a valley in which was a pool³ of water, and there were reeds⁴ round about it, and he went into the place where the reeds were dense⁵ that he might satisfy his hunger with the plants⁶ and herbs which were round about him. Then that guardian angel stood above him as before, and answered and said to him, "Whither canst thou flee from before the Lord? Large patches of the reed are found in the soft ground between hills and mountains. A fine example of such a reedy swamp is that which extends from the Khabûr to Buḥairet Khatûniyyeh, to the west of the Sinjâr Mountains; it affords excellent cover for wild animals of all kinds. I passed it in the late autumn of 1890, and the ride occupied more than two hours. Sir Henry Layard saw a leopard stealing from the high grass at this place. See Nineveh and Babylon, p. 324.

OF THE DEPARTURE OF THE BLESSED MÂR MÂRAN-^cAMMEH TO THE COUNTRY OF MARGÂ, AND OF THE MIRACLES WHICH TOOK PLACE THERE BY HIS HANDS.

which lay to the east of Margâ, and went up to a great village, situated in the mountain, the name of which was Bîrtâ. And he passed the night in the church [there] according to [his] custom, and it appeared to him in a dream that [one said to him], "This village is one of those which have provoked thy Lord, cast into it one of the arrows of thy curses, and get thee forth from it early." And with the falling of the sun upon the earth, he mounted his ass and went forth from it, and he turned his face towards it, and said, "O village full of iniquity, nevermore shall the cock, the harbinger of peace, crow in thee, nevermore shall his voice be heard in thee; thy inhabitants shall go forth from thee, and be scattered, and moreover thou shalt nevermore be inhabited." And with the word of the righteous man there went forth fire from the four ends of the village, [p. 161] and burnt up all the houses in a moment, and behold to this day no man dwelleth therein.

From this [village] he came to Bêth Tĕhûnâi¹ in which dwelt certain Shahrîghân who possessed many estates in the country. And one of these men whose name was Armenâzwâi,² had a wife, who was from the village Kĕphar 'Uzzêl,³ and she was well acquainted with the holy man; now she was a lady of noble birth. And there was in the village of Bêth Tëhûnâi a convent of holy women,¹ and the husband of this woman used to commit fornication with one of those nuns. And when the blessed man went into the church, the wife came² to him as to her father and as to the one who had reared her, and began to make an accusation against her husband concerning the secret unchastity which he wrought, and that he had forsaken her and was working fornication. And he called the man before him, and began to rebuke and to reprove him; saying, "Thou art not acting rightly, for instead of [the] lawful union, thou makest Satan to rejoice through [thy] corrupt union with strangers; moreover thou hast condemned thine own soul, and wilt be cast³ forth from being a member of His household." Now Armênâzwâi, instead of receiving the rebuke, and confessing his sin, and asking [pardon] with prayers, and promising repentance, abused the holy man with foul names, and also lifted⁴ up his hand to strike him. And the holy man answered and said to him, "I trust in our Lord that thou and all thy village shall go down alive⁵ into Sheol, like Korah, Dathan, and Abiram."⁶ And when the wife saw the cursing of the holy old man, and it fell upon her ears, she knew that straightway his command would be carried out, and she answered and said to him, "Father, what shall I and these my two sons do?" He said to her, "Get thee forth quickly, and flee to the Monastery of Kûrâi,¹ and tarry not here for an instant, that ye perish not." [p. 162] And it came to pass in the morning season, when the reapers were in the fields, that a sound like unto mighty peals of thunder was heard, and like that of the earth being rent asunder² under the village, and the mountain which was above it gave forth a sound as of falling upon it; and while the reapers of millet³ were looking on at a distance, they saw two horsemen mounted on horses of fire holding swords of fire in their hands; and they stood, one above the mountain, and one below it.⁴ And the horseman that was above answered and said to him that was below, "Do thou destroy from below, and I will destroy from above;" and thus the village of Bêth Têhûnâi sank into the earth with its inhabitants unto this day. Now those who remember these things told us that for quite two months before this happened, smoke and stinking vapours were ascending from the village; and [its destruction] became a proverb and a saying for ever.

And the blessed Mâran-³ammeh came to the village of these men. Now there was in it a small school,³ and twelve scholars and their teacher, and he went into it when the teacher was making ready to have a passage⁴ read from the Bible, and the passage was from Isaiah. And the blessed man asked him what passage he was going to read, and [when he had told him] Mâr Mâran-⁵ammeh said, "Leave this passage to-day, and begin from where I will shew thee." And he opened out⁵ the Book and shewed him [the passage], "Howl, O village;⁶ cry out and complain, O

And he called quickly to his disciple and said to him, “Run³ fast and quickly before the Metropolitan of the Nestorians (for behold he cometh from Mayâ K̄arîrê), and salute him for me, saying, ‘Thou knowest, my lord, the obligation by which I am bound and that it is not easy for me to come to salute thee; but I entreat thee by the love of our Lord, [p. 165] to draw near to me that I may see thee and be blessed by thee’.” Now when his disciple met Mâr Mâran-^cammeh at some distance away, he bowed down before him, and repeated to him everything which his master had said. And the holy old man answered and said, “He who withholdeth a salutation from his companion forsaketh the fear of the Highest.” Then the man in the pillar-shaped tower, seeing that the Metropolitan had turned aside into the road which went to his village, and being confident that he was coming to visit him, thrust his head through the window and said to the people of his village, “Behold how excellent is my manner of life before God! for behold the head of the wicked Nes-

And those who were spectators tell me that with the word of the blessed² old man, there appeared a little black cloud rising up and coming from Mount Matthew,³ and mighty thunders roared, and blazing lightnings played round about it, and it came on and rested over that pillar. thus he became a mockery and a byword according to the curse [laid] upon him by the old man. Then Shârzâdh, that is [to say] George, when he saw the storm, and the things which had taken place, answered and said to the Metropolitan, "Is the power which cleaveth to the saints so mighty as this?" and the Metropolitan said, "My son, what hast thou seen yet of the deeds of the Apostles?"¹ And George said to him, "If it be thus, as the Lord liveth, I will become a monk, and I will renounce the world, and everything that I have." The holy man said to him, "If now thou wilt do as thou sayest, and wilt make thyself a monk, our Lord will make thee the head of all His church;" [p. 167] and the prophecy of the holy man actually happened to the blessed Shârzâdh. For he went and became a disciple in the monastery of Bêth 'Âbhê, and when he had become the head of the monastery he said to the monks who were in his monastery, "My foot hath begun to tread the ladder of preferment according to the word of the blessed Mâran-'ammeh;" and when he had been Metropolitan of Elam for twenty-five years, he sent to the sons of his monastery, saying, "Another step is reserved for me, according to the word of the holy man." And when Rabban Īshô' bar-Nôn² died, this George became Patriarch after him, and he sent to his monastery, saying, "See, my brethren, the prophecy of Mâr Mâran-^cammeh concerning me has, in very deed, been fulfilled."

Now therefore the blessed Mâr Mâran-^cammeh went forth from Hennes, and he went up in anger to the province of Bîrtâ,¹ against the village of Hetrê, and against it he also cast the arrow of his curses, saying, "There shall never be bread in thee, and the life of everyone who shall dare to dwell in thee shall perish by famine and sickness;" and this village also was clothed with the curse, and it became a ruin for ever. And from these [deeds] the blessed man returned to his habitation like a valiant soldier, who had destroyed the enemies of his lord, and who had overthrown their lands for ever, and who had scattered to every wind those that were left.

dominion the great drought¹ which is called by the Elders the "first drought", since this took place following

¹ The זֶמְזִם is a hot, dry wind which dries up every pool and watercourse, and parches the ground, and destroys all vegetable life; in Deuteronomy xxviii. 22 it is mentioned with fever, fiery heat and mildew. Its effect upon the wheat crops may be gathered from Joshua the Stylite, who says that "in the month of Îyâr (May, A. D. 501) there blew a hot wind for three days, and all the corn of our land was dried up save in a few places," בְּחֹדֶשׁ יָאֵר בָּלְעָה הַיָּבֵשׁתִּי אֶת־כָּל־הַבָּרִיאִתִּי וְאֶת־כָּל־הַמַּעְיָן וְאֶת־כָּל־הַמַּיִם וְאֶת־כָּל־הַצִּמְחָה וְאֶת־כָּל־הַיֵּשֶׁבֶת וְאֶת־כָּל־הַבְּרִיאִתִּי וְאֶת־כָּל־הַמַּעְיָן וְאֶת־כָּל־הַמַּיִם וְאֶת־כָּל־הַצִּמְחָה (ed. Wright, text p. 41, translation, p. 35). The country round about Mōṣul has always been, and is still, peculiarly liable to great famines. The זֶמְזִם wind first dries up everything, then the locusts appear, and after them the cholera. The terrible famine which took place there a few years ago, when the British Vice-Consul Mr. Russell acted so nobly, is so recent that it scarcely needs to be mentioned; those who are interested in the subject may, however, find details in Sachau, Reise in Mesopotamien, p. 344.

According to Bar-Hebraeus, (Chronicle, text, ed. Bruns, p. 123) in the year 721 the water supply failed, and the villagers were obliged to go a distance of seven miles to fetch water. In the same year wheat and grain were very scarce, and in the following year the locusts came in great numbers. Two years later there was a great pestilence in Mesopotamia. In the year 784 flying locusts came and destroyed the crops, and made their way up the walls and through doors and windows into the houses which were filled with them. They filled all the water vessels, and having entered the houses from the south side they left them from the north side; having eaten up the grass and trees, they even devoured woollen garments and clothes. Three years after this plague a mighty famine took place. (B. H., Chronicle, text, p. 134) About the year 842 there was a "mighty famine and terrible pestilence and suffering by reason of the heavy taxes and exactions of the rebels" (B. H., Chronicle, text, p. 160). In A. H. 234 there blew over the whole of Mesopotamia "a mighty, hot wind the like of

This mound is called تَلِّ الثَّوْبَةِ, or in Syriac ܕܠܐ ܕܥܡܘܬܐ "the mound of repentance," because the prophet Jonah is said to have gathered the Ninevites together, and to have preached to them there, after which they repented. The position of the Monastery of Yûnus ibn-Mattai, ܕܝܪܝܘܢܝܫ ܒܢ ܡܬܝ is described in Yâḫût, ii. p. 810. The fountain of Yûnus is about one mile distant from the mound; see Voyages d'ibn Batoutah, ed. Defrémery, tom. ii. p. 137. Nebi Yûnus is within the walls which mark the site of the ancient Nineveh, and is opposite Kouyunjik (Koyunshik) and Môṣul. The excavations which have been made there have brought to light inscriptions of Sennacherib and Esarhaddon. For a description of the place see Tuch, De Nino Urbe, p. 50; Rich, Narrative of a Residence, vol. ii. p. 44; Sandreczki, Reise nach Mosul, part ii. p. 48; Sachau, Reise in Mesopotamien, p. 343. It is also possible that the words "Hebrew Fortress" may refer to the mound of Kouyunjik, upon which stood the قلعة نينوى or "Nineveh Castle;" the mound was called ܕܠܐ ܕܥܡܘܬܐ the "hill of the Nineveh Fortress," or ܕܠܐ ܕܥܡܘܬܐ, or ܕܠܐ ܕܥܡܘܬܐ. And when he passed by singing a psalm, they knew that he had none of his property with him; but when his disciples entered that hollow, the thieves rose up and laid hold upon the possessions which were under them. And his disciples cried out to him, and he turned back and saw the thieves making ready to carry off everything that he had with him. And he said to his disciples, "Give me my staff;" and when they had given it to him, he tied his turban cloth around the top of it, and threw it towards heaven in anger. And when they saw this wonder they were in great fear, and they let go their hands from the mules, and asked for alms from him like wretched beggars, saying, [p. 169] "Consider us also, O blessed man, like those poor people to whom thou art carrying this money, and give us alms from it, for it is through hunger that we have done this." And he commanded his disciples, and they gave money to them, and thus those thieves turned back, and travelled on their way rejoicing; and when they came to their habitation they proclaimed continually throughout the whole country the wonderful thing which the blessed man had wrought. CHAPTER X.

OF THE SICKNESS WHICH SMOTE THE HOLY MAN, AND OF HIS DEPARTURE FROM THIS LIFE OF TIME TO THAT OF ETERNITY.

Now when the blessed man had arrived at infirm old age, after he had laboured prosperously in the vineyard of his Lord from the breasts and from tender childhood¹ to the evening of advanced old age, the glorious end of his contests drew near and arrived. And he perceived the beginning of his fatal sickness, and commanded and they prepared an animal for him to ride upon,² and he went to the Monastery of Bârķâ³ with the hope that he would gain benefit from drinking the waters of the Tigris. Now when he had tarried there ten days, and saw that every day he was going backwards, he rose up to come to his country, and when he arrived at the village of Bêth Rêwâi,¹ he went in to lie there for the night. And when the inhabitants of Rêwâi saw that his departure from [this] life was at hand, [p. 170] they would not allow him to depart from them; and with all manner of reasons and deeds they worked that he might finish his course with them, and that his holy body might be laid in their church. And Mâr Mâran-^cammeh sent secretly to Lôhrâsâph,² and he came to him; and while Lôhrâsâph was weeping in his presence, because he saw that he was already laid in the chamber of the tomb, the holy man quieted him, and whispered to him, saying, "I desire and very much wish to lie in thy church, and it is also the will of our Lord that I should be laid there, for thy village is about to become a very rich and much inhabited place; but these villagers are scheming³ and planning all manner of devices so as not to allow me to depart from here. Do thou then ask for thy ten thousand *zûzê*⁴ from me, and demand from them either that they shall give thee ten thousand zûzê, and that thou shalt leave me here to them, or that they shall allow thee to carry me with thee to thy village." And Lôhrâsâph began to speak to the Metropolitan in an audible voice, saying, "Master, give⁵ me that money, ten thousand zûzê, which thou didst borrow from me before thy departure, give it to me, for it is my children's means of subsistence;" and the Metropolitan promised, saying, "I am in debt to thee, carry me away that I may go and give thee the money." And when the inhabitants of Rêwâi began to prevent him, the holy man said to them, "If ye wish to keep me back give this nobleman the ten thousand zûzê which I owe him, or depart from me that I may go and give them to him while I am alive." Now the inhabitants of Rêwâi were poor and were wholly unable to do this, and he commanded that they should prepare [p. 171] an animal for him to ride on,¹ and when he had come half way on the road, the soul of the blessed man departed, and went by the hands of holy angels with spiritual hymns of praise to Paradise, and rested with the spirits and souls of the righteous who have been made perfect. And the nobles and the dahkânê of the village, together with the multitudes who came from the estates round about, paid honour to his holy body, and bore it with the ceremony which befitted the greatness of his person, and laid it in the church close by the ܩܘܪܒܢܐ (κατάστρωμα)² of the ܩܘܪܒܢܐ

² According to Bar-Bahlûl (Brit. Mus. Or. 2441, fol. 343*b*, col. 1) ܩܘܪܒܢܐ is the name given to the "two balustrades (or banisters), between which the steps were built" ܩܘܪܒܢܐ ܩܘܪܒܢܐ (sic) ܩܘܪܒܢܐ. Another lexicon, Brit. Mus. Add. 7203, fol. 159*a*, col. 2, says that ܩܘܪܒܢܐ is "the raised platform (or dais) which is before the door of the altar," ܩܘܪܒܢܐ ܩܘܪܒܢܐ; and India Office Lexicon, fol. 11*b*, col. 2, explains both ܩܘܪܒܢܐ and ܩܘܪܒܢܐ by ܩܘܪܒܢܐ "the altar." ܩܘܪܒܢܐ = ܩܘܪܒܢܐ in Ezechiel viii. 16; Joel ii. 17. ܩܘܪܒܢܐ is the whole area of the church before the ܩܘܪܒܢܐ, (not the place where the seats of the clergy stand), and was the raised or built up floor of the choir upon which the

The ⲕⲟⲅⲅⲉ also included the ⲕⲟⲅⲅⲉ ⲕⲟⲅⲅⲉ, and its pavement was three steps above the pavement of the rest of the church. (See B. O., iii. ii. p. 802, note 1). ⲕⲟⲅⲅⲉ seems to mean primarily a "tiled pavement" (compare Bekker, Anecdota Graeca, Tom. 1. p. 269, l. 27, where καλαμίδας is explained by ἡ τοὺς θηλυκοὺς καλάμους τοὺς πρὸς σύνδεσμον τῶν πλινθίνων καταστρωμάτων τῆς οἰκοδομίας), and cannot be older than the ἔδαφος πλινθοῖς καταστρωμένον which was laid on the ground before the temple where the altar of burnt sacrifice was placed. ⲕⲟⲅⲅⲉ is also the "deck of a vessel;" compare καταστρώματα, τῆς νεῶς μέρος, ἐν ᾧ ἐστῶτες ναυμαχοῦσιν, Hesychius, Lexicon, ed. Schmidt, Jena, 1857, p. 435. On men-of-war the κατάστρωμα must have been the uppermost deck of all, as the combatants were posted on it when the ship went into action: see Thucydides, i. 49. 1,3; Polybios, i. 44. 3; Plutarch, Themistocles, 14, Antonius, 67. On merchantmen the κατάστρωμα must also have been the uppermost deck, for the depth of the ship was reckoned from the κατάστρωμα to the bottom of the hold: see Lucian, navigium, V. RESPONSE.² MAY WE FIND MERCY THROUGH THE PRAYERS OF THE PRIEST WHOSE COMMEMORATION IS CELEBRATED WITH GREAT HONOUR IN OUR CONGREGATION.

MY BRETHREN, BLESS YE THE LORD!

O lovers of truth, bring near to my wretchedness
 the entreaty of truth,
 That I may weave with my words a crown of the praises of the pious man.
 The children of the nobility of this world,³ and of
 that of Christ,
 Have asked from me a petition wholly full of the love of the righteous man.
 5 The guests of light, and those who enjoy the Living
 Mystery
 Have made me the means [of recounting] the glorious praises of the noble labourer.
 The children of the right hand have urged my uninstructed right hand
 To paint a picture of his perfection full of beauty.
 The chief of pastors, and the father of priests, Mâran-^cammeh,
 10 The man who was pre-eminent in the Holy Church, they wish to praise.
 The watchful shepherd, and steward⁺ of the treasures of the Spirit,

Their command seeketh to crown by means of our speech.

To the angel of light, to the pure and entirely holy man,

May they and I devote our words on the day of his commemoration.

15 And with the offering and sacrifice of truth, [p. 173] which his vigil requireth,

We will compose a discourse in which [his] contests shall be sung.

And while with my mouth and understanding I take refuge in his prayer,

May my tongue well up with a pleasing discourse on his glorious deeds.

May my feeble speech travel on with his history,

20 And may it repeat the stories concerning him, in order, even as they were performed.

The holy man sprang from Ḥaṭre² a city in Ṭîrhân,³ From a family⁴ and holy race of righteous men.

Mâran⁵-ammeh was he named by his parents,

And as in prophecy [he was named] with a noble name [so also] his person was distinguished.

25 Our Lord Jesus was with him, and chose him for Himself,

And from his youth up He set him aside and sanctified him for His household.

To be a member of His heavenly household was the holy man worthy,

Before this [man] he was instructed in the writings of the Spirit,
 And in the expositions of Theodore,¹ the scribe of truth.

¹ Theodore was born at Antioch, and was the son of wealthy parents. He succeeded Olympius as Bishop of Mopsuestia in Cilicia about A. D. 394, and died A. D. 429, having filled the office of bishop for thirty-six years. In Nestorian writings he is usually called the "Expositor" (see Budge, Book of the Bee, p. 140), on account of his having written expositions or commentaries on the greater number of the books of the Bible. Whatever were his exact opinions upon the Natures of Christ, it is certain that the Nestorians began at a very early date to quote them in support of their own views. Ma'nâ, a Persian by race, from the town of Bêth Hardashêr, who was resident at Edessa in the earlier part of the fifth century, and is mentioned by Simeon of Bêth Arshâm among the distinguished Nestorian scholars whom he holds up to ridicule, devoted himself to the task of translating into Syriac the commentaries of Theodore of Mopsuestia during the lifetime of that great theologian (Wright, Syr. Lit., p. 830.). According to 'Abhd-Îshô', Theodore composed in all forty-one volumes. He wrote a commentary on Genesis in three volumes; a metaphysical work for the noble Alphaeus entitled ܐܘܢܘܢܐ ܕܘܢ ܕܘܢ ܕܘܢ; a commentary on the Psalms in five volumes for Զերդն and his brother; a commentary on the twelve Minor Prophets in two volumes for Mâr Ծւրիս; a commentary on Samuel in one volume for Mamarianus; a commentary on Job in two volumes for Cyril of Alexandria; a commentary on Ecclesiastes in one volume for Porphyry; and a commentary on Isaiah, Ezekiel, Jeremiah and Daniel. On St. Matthew he wrote a commentary for Julius in one volume; on Luke and John for Eusebius; on the Acts of the Apostles for Basil; on the Romans for Eusebius; on the two books of the Corinthians for Theodore; on four letters for Eustratius, and on Galatians and Ephesians; on Philippians, Colossians and the two books of the Thessalonians for Jacob; on Timothy for

And he received fully the doctrine of the Holy Church.

Now when the Lord stirred up the heart of Rabban Bâbhai,

To go up to our country, and to sow in it the teaching of Life,

He associated Mâran-^cammeh with him in that going up,

They two arrived with many [people] at the country of Arbela,⁴

And first of all planted a great school in Kěphar^cUzzêl.

He wrote a book on the "Sacraments;" another on "Faith;" two volumes on the "Priesthood;" two volumes on the "Holy Spirit;" one volume on the "Incarnation;" two volumes against "Eunomius;" two volumes against those who would say, "Sin is ingrained in [our] nature;" two volumes "against Magianism;" one volume "to Monks;" one on "obscure speech" ܩܕܝܫܐ ܕܥܡܘܨܝܐ; one volume on "Perfection of manner of life;" five volumes against "Allegorists," ܩܕܝܫܐ ܕܩܕܝܫܐ; one volume "on behalf of Basil;" one volume on "the taker and that which is taken," ܩܕܝܫܐ ܕܩܕܝܫܐ; "the Book of the Pearl," in which his letters are collected; and a "discourse on the laying down of the Law", ܩܕܝܫܐ ܕܩܕܝܫܐ. And when it flourished with scholars and doctors,¹
 He left it in the hands of Mâran-^cammeh and went away from it,

55 That he might go and plant other schools like unto it,
 And place in them teachers from among his disciples.

The holy Rabban Bâbhai planted sixty schools,
 And established sixty men, teachers of the truth, in them.

He ordained that Mâran-^cammeh [p. 175] should be established in this our [school],²

60 And he departed to Gëbhîltâ,³ and there he died.
 Mâran-^cammeh became a teacher in this church,
 In which his venerable body was laid at the end of his life.

By the glorious rays of his teaching and manner of life

Every one round about him shone by the power of the grace which clave to him.

65 He became a teacher and a preacher of the Spirit,
 And he preached and taught the doctrine of his Lord like Paul.

He planted spiritual cuttings in the courtyards of the Church,

And he reared them upon the rain and dew which [fell] from his lips.

³ Here we must follow the reading of BC.

He weaned his body from the dainty things of all manner of pleasant foods, 70 And by voluntary abstinence from a life of softness
 he emaciated his body.
 The mind which is devoted to the flesh is wont to beget a thick belly,
 When it remaineth barren¹ of the mind devoted to spiritual things.
 He sanctified himself to be an offering to the name of the Creator,
 And he cleansed his heart from all the passions of the body and soul.
 75 His thoughts shone like incorporeal light,
 He made his feelings² to possess a chaste demeanour, and a pure report.
 At every moment he made his eyes to be occupied with the writings of the Spirit,
 He also sanctified his hands by means of almsgiving.
 His feet had for a firm standing-place truth and rectitude,
 80 As it is written concerning his fellows in the writings of the Spirit.
 He became a temple [p. 176] and a pure shrine according to the command,
 And was a dwellingplace for the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit,
 As our Lord Jesus promised³ to the friends of His love,

And He blessed by his hand also the signs of the Cross which he made.

And by his blessings he made the sterile fruitful, and dried up wombs he made fertile.

And although he excelled in all divine beauties,

And from the labour of teaching the Spirit raised him up,

Church,

To the throne of Salâkh, the country of Yânes (Jannes)

And fear and wonder filled the hearts of the multitudes that were with him.

The wretched man was beaten to pieces, [p. 185]

proverb for generations,

According to what the sanctified mouth of our pious father said.

The head of the Holy Church was exalted by reason of that which was wrought,

And the heretics, the followers of Severus¹ were made a mockery.

The report flew like a bird into all countries,

290 And the hidden power which is in holy men was glorified.

And to George, by the spirit of revelation, he prophesied,² [saying],

“Our Lord Jesus will exalt thee to be the head of all His Church”,

And also to this man was this thing wrought in a sublime³ manner,

And he was appointed Catholicus and Patriarch of the Church.

295 He went forth from these [villages], being led by the hand of the angel,

To the village of Hetrê which is situated at the ends of the earth.

And the arrow which was left he threw and cast
at it, and it remained a ruin,

It is necessary then, that above all things we should cleave to the truth, and that we should carefully preserve the order of truth, so that we may not err from what is seemly, but that we may write [p. 193] and may make manifest those things which stir up in the hearts of the prudent glory to God, Who in the early, middle and latter [generations] shewed forth and still sheweth forth His power, and Who honoured and held to be worthy of the same reward of one dînâr those who had laboured in the vineyard of His commandments the whole day, and those who had laboured for some hours, and those who had laboured for one hour [only].²

OF THE BLESSED RABBAN ÎSHÔ^c-YAHBH, THE HEAD OF THE MONASTERY, WHENCE HE CAME, OF WHAT PARENTS HE WAS BORN, AND OF HOW HE WAS BROUGHT UP.

In the three books which precede this, which is the fourth, the matter³ of our discourse hath undertaken to relate the histories of holy men, some of which have been written down by skilled writers, and some of which have not been put on record.⁴ Of those histories which exist in writing we have written such things as [their writers] omitted, and which we either found in the histories of others, or which were handed down¹ to us by hearsay; but those histories which do not exist in writing, and which are inscribed neither in works specially devoted to them, nor in other places, I have learned from the very old men who were to be found in this monastery, and according as Christ our Lord hath aided me I have made them to possess consecutive order,² and have laid them before thee [O 'Abd-Îshô^c]. And behold now, by the help of our Lord and by thy prayers, I will proceed with my rehearsing of them, and with my feeble ability will relate the histories of these holy men who a short time ago served our Lord in this holy monastery, [p. 194] and all the things concerning them which were luminously pointed out to me by the holy men who lived in their days, and who became also their disciples. At the beginning of their histories we will place the account of the triumphs of the holy Rabban Îshô^c-yahbh. Now this Îshô^c-yahbh of holy memory was by race from this country of Margâ; he sprang from an honourable and noble family, and was a kinsman of the Patriarch Îshô^c-yahbh the Great.³ The village in which he was born and brought up was Tellâ,⁴ a village in the province of Bîrtâ,⁵ and he became a disciple in this monastery from his youth at the hands of the Metropolitan Bishop Mâr John, when he was head of the monastery.¹ And when the holy Mâr Aḥâ,² the head of the monastery, was consecrated Metropolitan after Mâr John, this holy man was elected head of this monastery; and when the Bishop of Nineveh, Mâr Abraham, of blessed life, died, the people of Nineveh begged and entreated that he might be their bishop, and the blessed Mâr Aḥâ ordained Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh bishop, and sent him to Nineveh; and he performed the episcopal office until he was crowned with old age. And when the pious Hĕnân-Îshô^c,³ this other Catholicus, died, and a synod was assembled to appoint a Catholicus, the election to the patriarchate was ordered and prepared for the blessed Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh by all the Bishops and Metropolitans and heads of believers so that he became the Patriarch.⁴

OF MÂR TIMOTHY, BISHOP OF BÊTH BĚGHÂSH, AND OF THE PROPHECY WHICH WAS MADE CONCERNING HIM BY ONE OF THE OLD MEN [IN THE MONASTERY].

Now there was in this monastery a certain solitary, who was an exceedingly old man, with whose name I am unacquainted. Now Timothy had an uncle whose name was George, who was Bishop of the country of Bêth Běghâsh,¹ and he sent the boy Timothy² from him to Rabban Mâr Abraham³ the Expositor, when he was in Bâshôsh,⁴ a village of Saphsâphâ, and the boy made his passage [thither by way of] this monastery. And when that holy old man came to this community, and saw the youth who was standing up, it was revealed to him that he was to be exalted above all who were there by Christ our Lord, and he knew that he was to be a chief in the Church of God. And when [the service in] the church was ended,⁵ he took him with him to his cell, and made him sit down, and asked him, saying, "Whence comest thou, my son, and whither goest thou?" And the youth said to him, "I am a nephew of George, Bishop of Bêth Běghâsh, and he has sent me that I might go to school to Rabban Abraham, in the village of Bâshôsh". Now at that time, according to what is said, a *gerîbhâ*¹ of wheat was sold for one zûzâ, and [the old man] took out one zûzâ and gave him, and admonished him, saying, "Go now and buy wheat, and eat, and work fully in the study of the Scriptures, and guard thyself from all ignoble things, for thou shalt become Patriarch of all the country of the East. And behold, our Lord will make thee triumphant so that like unto thee no one hath ever been, and before and after thee no one shall ever be. Forty [p. 196] and two years shalt thou stand at the head of all the pastures of Christ, and when by the hand of God thou hast been exalted to these things, let thy heart be disposed to honour this holy house, in which it was [made] known to thee that thou wert neither of no account nor despised before God; go now in peace, and keep those things which I have commanded thee". And when the youth had been sufficiently trained and had returned to his uncle,—now George was using every means he could to adjudge his throne to his brother's son—[Divine] grace, I say, wrought that which was beyond his intention, and he excused himself to Mâr Mâran^cammeh the Metropolitan on the ground of his old age, and resigned the priesthood. And the young man Timothy was appointed Bishop of the country of Bêth Bĕghâsh.

CHAPTER IV.

OF HOW TIMOTHY OBTAINED POSSESSION OF THE PATRIARCHATE
BY FRAUD,¹ LIKE JACOB WHO OBTAINED BY FRAUD THE BLESSINGS OF ISAAC HIS FATHER.²

There are times when matters concerning heaven and things above [this] world require human means and help, and we may learn and prove from many instances that such means and help are allowed by the Will of God, even though they progress by cunning.³ When God the Lord of all made the blessed Isaac to bless his sons, He moved him with the desire for food of the chase in the desert, to such a degree that when Esau was away, there should be the opportunity for Jacob to carry away the blessing. And if it were not so would not that great and rich man have said to his son, "My son, slay me a kid of the goats, that I may eat, and that my soul may bless thee before I die"?⁴ [p. 197] but no, he sent him off upon the troublesome labour of hunting after fleeing and inaccessible prey. Thus also was it when Samuel was commanded by the Lord to anoint David, and he feared the sword of Saul, he was commanded to take a heifer and to say, "I am come to sacrifice to the Lord".⁵ Thus also was it when the blessed Paul received a revelation from God that not one of them should perish, but only the ship, and he said beforehand to all those who were with him, "Eat bread, and be not distressed, for our Lord hath revealed it to me that no soul of us shall perish, but only the ship"; and [when] he knew that the sailors were making ready to flee, he said to the Romans who were with him, "If these flee we shall all perish."¹ And [there are] many [other] instances which it is not necessary for us to collect.

And in this case also, since the Patriarchate was set apart for Timothy, truth acted with subtlety and performed its work. And² when Timothy saw the face of every man fixed upon our Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh, he advised him secretly when they were alone together, and said to him, "Thou art an old man, and thou art notable to stand up and meet the attacks of the envious, Ephraim of Elam, Joseph the son of Marî, and other opponents; but do thou excuse thyself, and become one of my supporters, and I will make thee Metropolitan of Adiabene"; and to speak briefly, Timothy was appointed Catholicus and Patriarch, and was proclaimed among the heads of the fathers. And after a few days, because the holy Mâr Mâran-^cammeh, Metropolitan of Arbela, was dead, he appointed and proclaimed Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh Bishop of the church of Adiabene, and Metropolitan of all his countries.³

Bishop of Bâghâsh, a diocese in the mountains of Arbela. Now when Hĕnân-Īshô' was dead a schism fell among the Bishops and the people. Some of them wished Ephraim, Metropolitan of Gundê-Shâbhôr to be Patriarch, some wished for Thomas, Bishop of Kashkar, and some for this Timothy. Then Timothy acted craftily, and having filled bags (ܩܘܒܐܘܬܐ) with copper money (ܩܘܒܐܘܬܐ = ܩܘܒܐܘܬܐ), he sealed them, and took them with him. And he called the scholastics (ܩܘܒܐܘܬܐ) to him secretly by night, and said to them, "I have collected all this money, dînârs and dirhams, and I wish to spend it upon [your] school; help me then, and ye shall find good [for yourselves]". And they being led astray believed his words, and went forth and fought against all those who were opposed to [the election of] Timothy. And they brought the Bishops by force, and took Timothy and carried him to Seleucia and proclaimed him Patriarch. Meanwhile Thomas, Metropolitan of Kashkar, gathered together thirteen bishops, and they came to Bagdad and tarried in the Monastery of Mâr Pethiôn, and they deposed Timothy on the third Sunday of the forty days' fast; and Timothy gathered together other [bishops] and excommunicated Thomas. Thomas and his bishops then elected the monk George, but this rival died suddenly, and Timothy having succeeded in deceiving Bêrôë the archdeacon, بيروى الاركدياقون, and the heads of colleges (as stated above), by promising them large sums of money he caused himself to be elected Patriarch. Subsequently Ephraim of Gundê-Shâbhôr, Solomon of al-Hadîthah, Joseph of Merv, and Sergius of Ma'allthâ held a synod at the Monastery of Bêth Hâlê, in which they made Rôstâm, Bishop of Hĕnâithâ, Metropolitan of Adiabene in place of Īshô'-yahbh, and excommunicated Timothy, who, in return excommunicated Joseph of Merv. OF THE GOING UP OF OUR HOLY MÂR ÎSHÔ^c-YAHBH TO

And when Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh had arrived at the village of Haighâlâ,² and at Estrenîyâ,³ and had heard and learned also concerning the things which had taken place in the matter of Rôstâm, he wrote to Mâr Timothy, saying, "This is thy love for thy friend! Thou hast deceived me, and hast made a laughing-stock of me. Thou hast brought me out from the throne of Nineveh upon which I sat, and I am deprived even of this throne which thou hast been pleased to give me;⁴ take then this priesthood which thou hast given to me, and I will go to my own monastery and will end my life [there]". And Mâr Timothy wrote to him, "Faint not, neither be disturbed by these two tails of burning brands⁵ who have appointed a Metropolitan⁶ without

And when the blessed Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh had read these things, he took courage and went up and came to his country. And when, according to the agreement³ which existed between them, neither the Shahrîghân nor the Ârô^câyê⁴ went out to meet him, he went up to the Bânîkâyê,⁵ and these people, and those of all their province, and all the people of the mountains of Adiabene, and the people of Hefthôn⁶ received him with great joy, and with the honour of which his holiness was worthy; [p. 200] and he passed over to Margâ, and he remained thus visiting these believing people, and they rejoiced in him. And Rôstâm and the nobles of Kĕphar 'Uzzêl lived luxuriously upon all manner of dainty foods when he first⁷ came from his throne to them, and they enjoyed themselves with riotous living while they threatened and made ready to drive away the blessed Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh from the part of the country which he held; but they did not know that they would be put to shame through what they were preparing and making ready.

¹ Literally "a feast of cakes of his dainty foods"; ܩܘܫܘܬܐ = a drinking party, a banquet. According to Lagarde, Pûrîm, פּוּרִים, ܩܘܫܘܬܐ, Mandaitic ܩܘܫܘܬܐ are derived from فروهران the Persian name of a festival. ܩܘܫܘܬܐ (for ܩܘܫܘܬܐ) = cakes, and in Jeremiah vii. 18, translates the Hebrew ܩܘܫܘܬܐ. The word is explained by the native lexicographers to mean, "sacrifices offered to idols"; "sacrifices which were offered to devils in the time of the heathen, and which the Arabs still make in their festival;" and "cakes made of fine flour, oil and honey." For the texts see Payne Smith, Thes., coll. 1163, 1164; Duval, Lexicon, col. 684. The reading of BC Vat. ܩܘܫܘܬܐ is a mistake for ܩܘܫܘܬܐ, the sing. of which ܩܘܫܘܬܐ nausea, is also explained by "the food which burneth in the stomach of gluttons, and which maketh smoke in the throat;" see Payne Smith, Thes., col. 354. The form ܩܘܫܘܬܐ indigestion, is given in Duval, Lexicon, col. 269. Compare Armen. zoh "sacrifice". Lagarde, Armenische Studien, p. 55, No. 792 (*Abhandlungen König. Gesell. who persecuted the prophets.¹ And this was a marvellous and fearful thing² to all those who heard it. And Rôstâm's boon companions were disgraced; and their faces put to shame; and their counsels brought to nought; and their fellowship and the bond of love and their breathings of death against the righteous man [Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh] which they had murmured over their wine³ cups when brimming over with mixed wine were dissolved. Then too the pious Mâr Solomon wrote a letter of excuses and resigned [his] episcopal office, and went and dwelt in the Monastery of Rabban Aaron until the end of his life, and Joseph, the son of Marî forsook Christianity and became a heathen. Thus was fulfilled upon them that which the pious Mâr Timothy spake, saying, "The day of their destruction is near at hand, and that which shall happen to them hasteneth."

those of whom the kingdom hath learned by experience for a long time that they are fit to have its riches entrusted to their care, how much less in respect of the treasures of the kingdom of heaven is not every man worthy to be an intermediary of their glory, but only that man who is stamped with the signs of the members of the household, who hath shown forth all the days of his life proofs of his strenuousness, who hath drunk like water medicines which cannot be perceived by the mind, who hath driven away all [signs of] growing old, who hath expelled from himself all crassness, who hath been in the hospital¹ and hath learned all things which are needful for healing, who hath been made perfect in all the art of the healing of souls, and who hath become a friend of wise physicians. And because also the Divine selection, observing beforehand the excellent qualities of many, of its administration maketh intermediaries of those who possess such qualities, and setteth apart physicians for the sickness of the world, in such wise that when they come to act as intermediaries with mankind they shall not be found wanting, and shall not suffer, together with the scattering of the collection of their good qualities, the ruin and destruction of those who are under their hands.

Now this Rôstâm, the evil liver, took refuge with men, and forgot the word of the divine man David, "It is better to trust in the Lord than to trust in man",² for "his spirit goeth forth, and he returneth to his earth",³ etc. And when the Eye which governeth all things saw beforehand all the defects which he had the administration of God which is beyond scrutiny, that these things which are easy for the might of the wise Creator break out suddenly, beyond all expectation and human thought, and they make the minds of the prudent to stand up in wonder, and they stir up praise of the excellence of His dispensation on every tongue and in every mind. [p. 204] And moreover, we must write down some of these our matters concerning our own monastery that we may shew that it is easy for His power to do every thing, and that when it appeareth fit to him, He maketh use of the riches and money of strangers as if they were His own, even as He spake by the hand of Haggai the prophet, "The gold is mine, and the silver is mine",¹ and, "From between the teeth, and from the depths of the sea He turneth back, and bringeth forth, and saveth",² as He spake by the hand of David. And He compelleth forcibly foreign nations who are remote from the knowledge of Him and His worship, to be servants of those whom He pleaseth, and He maketh them to carry their wealth and their glory and to place them in the hands of those who are members of His household. For when the coming forth of the people from Egypt by the hand of Moses was ordained and predestined in His everlasting knowledge, and the gold and the silver which the construction of the Tabernacle in the wilderness would require from them [was determined], He commanded the children of Israel, by the hand of Moses, to borrow vessels of gold, and vessels of silver, and fine raiment of all kinds from the Egyptians, and He gave the Israelites favour in the eyes of the Egyptians, and they spoiled them.¹ And again when king Solomon was making ready to build a house to the Lord, he, so to speak, moved every thing under heaven, and he made the Tyrians, and the Sidonians,² and Saba, and Ophir, and Havilah, and the remote islands to be participators with him in the building of the holy temple in Jerusalem.³ So also in the case of the temple which was restored by Zerubbabel⁴ after the return from the captivity, when the children of Judah were prevented [in their work] by the envious nations that were round about them, and were in despair because they thought that this return from the captivity was not that which the prophets proclaimed, and also because of the insufficiency [of money] for the expenses of its mighty and glorious buildings, the Lord encouraged them by the hand of the prophet and said, "Yet once, and I will [p. 205] shake the heavens, and the earth, and the dry land; and I will shake all nations, and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord, the mighty One, and I will shake the house of Magog".⁵ And they went up, being prepared, with great riches, and the Lord destroyed them all, and the children of Judah inherited their riches and built the house of the Lord, and had money to spare.

And [several] such-like things which were in no wise of less magnitude than these did the Lord work in this place for His chosen servant Mâr Îshô'-yahbh. For when he meditated pulling down that temple which the blessed Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh the Catholicus had built, and which had become old through the lapse of time and years, and his friends were advising him not to do this, saying, "Thou wilt never be able to finish thy building"; and the men who were envious of him, and those who took no pleasure in such divine matters, but were turning them back through human considerations, even as [saith] the great and blessed Pachomius,¹ were hinder-

¹ Pachomius was born in the nome of Esneh, (Egypt. ∫ ^{~~~~} ⊗ sen, Copt. Ⲅⲏⲏ), about A. D. 292, and his parents were pagans; he became a Christian at a little village called ⲠⲚⲚⲄⲤⲦ, (the Χηνοβόσκιον of the Greeks) which was situated on the right or east bank of the Nile in the nome of Diospolis Parva. He lived during the time of the persecution of Diocletian, and at its ending he was about twenty years old. When the Persians threatened to make war against the Greeks (ⲏⲓⲣⲱⲗⲓⲟⲥ), he was drawn as a recruit from his native village, and being fed by Christians when they stopped at the town of Esneh, he was greatly impressed by their charity. Next day he sailed as far as Antinoë, and was met there by the news that the Greeks had conquered the Persians, and that the recruits were to be sent back to their homes. On his way back he came to the "desert village of Shenesêt, which was burnt up by excessive heat" ⲐⲚⲚⲄⲤⲦ ἢ Ⲅⲣⲏⲟⲥ χⲉ ⲠⲚⲚⲄⲤⲦ Ⲅⲣⲟⲕⲧ ⲑⲓⲧⲉⲓ ⲡⲁⲩⲁ ἢ ⲏⲕⲁⲧⲏⲁ, and there God appeared to him and told him to take up his abode. Three years later he joined Abba Palamôn (ⲡⲁⲗⲗⲏⲱⲏ), and became his disciple. Soon after this his sister Mary came to Tabenna (ⲦⲀⲖⲈⲏⲏⲏⲤⲓ, see Quatremère, Mémoires Géographiques, tom. I. p. 281) to see him, but he refused to see her, and learning that she was disposed to lead a life of good works, he sent some of his brethren to build a habitation for her at some distance from the monastery. A number of pious women joined her, and she became the founder of a rule of nuns. Some time later Pachomius went

ing him, saying, "We do not wish thee to pull down the temple which the holy fathers have built. Thou wilt begin to build another, and wilt never finish it, or thou wilt leave it half built, and wilt go away", yet Īshō'-yahbh prevailed over both sides by the firmness of his hope in God, and he brought many workmen and hewers of stone, and he went with them to the mountain of Dēbhar Hewtôn¹ and he shewed them round about the river Zābhâ (Zâb) limestone which they were to quarry. And he made rafts² and brought to the north of Panopolis (ⲡⲏⲙⲓⲛ, Ahmîm) and built monasteries at Smine, or Tesmine (see Champollion, L'Égypte sous les Pharaons, tom. i. p. 265), and at Phenoum, Ⲫⲏⲟⲩⲟⲩ, near the mountains of Esneh. Thus in founding monasteries, in confirming the brethren, in healing the sick, and in working miracles Pachomius passed his life; and died about A. D. 351, aged sixty years. The above facts are drawn from the Coptic life of Pachomius published by Amélineau, entitled Histoire de Saint Pakhôme et de ses Communautés, (in Annales du Musée Guimet) Paris, 1889; and from Étude Historique sur Saint Pachome (in Bulletin de l'Institut Égyptien de l'année 1886, Cairo 1887) by the same author. kalak, pronounced vulgarly tcheletch) is a raft made of skins of sheep blown out and tied in rows to poles. The poles are fastened together by other poles and ropes and thus a square or oblong structure is made. Upon it are laid planks of wood, and upon those is placed the merchandise to be carried. A small raft to carry four or five passengers and a fair amount of baggage requires about one hundred and fifty skins, and measures about 15×20 feet; but in the large wheat and alabaster carrying rafts several hundreds are required; such rafts are from thirty to forty feet square, and will carry from twenty-five to forty tons of wheat packed in sacks, each of which weighs about two hundredweight. The kalak floats down the stream, and is guided by very long oars, at the ends of which are tied pieces of reeds to form blades. The kalakje, or raftsman, every now and then pours water upon the skins to prevent the escape of the air inside, but it is often necessary to untie the neck of each skin, and to blow air into it with his mouth through a reed, which he carries for this purpose. When a raft arrives at its destination the poles are untied, and sold either for building purposes or firewood, and the skins are untied, emptied of air, dried thoroughly, and having been tied in bundles, are packed upon the backs of animals and sent up the river to be used again. The speed of a raft depends upon the current and upon the exertions of the raftsman. I made the journey by raft from Mōsul to Bagdad in February 1889 in a little over four days; but in December 1890 the journey required nearly seven days, while the huge rafts about forty feet square which I passed at the junction of the Lower Zâb with the Tigris did not arrive for some days after I had landed at Bagdad. Rafts which carry alabaster slabs for building purposes or for burning into lime are much smaller than wheat rafts, and the skins are often totally submerged. For other descriptions of the raft see Buckingham, Travels, vol. ii. p. 87; and Ker Porter, Travels, vol. ii. p. 259.

stands for either ܐܘܠܐܢܐ ܕܢܗܪܐ “the tooth of a river bed,” or ܐܘܠܐܢܐ ܕܪܘܫܐ “the head of a river bed.” It seems that Thomas of Margâ means that he brought blocks of limestone to build a pier in the peak of the mountain upon which the monastery stood, where two streams joined, to form a firm foundation for the walls of the church. The rafts would bring the stone immediately under the monastery, and mules and donkeys would bring it up the hill.

¹ In Môsul, and in Mesopotamia generally, burnt limestone is pounded by means of a large square stone, about two feet long by ten or twelve inches square, which having been pierced longitudinally is fastened to two chains by means of an iron rod running through it, and is drawn over the limestone by a horse or mule. The pounded lime is placed in basket panniers, two of which form a good load for a donkey, and in this way it is carried a considerable distance. Within the last few years the pious monks of the Monastery of Rabban Hormuzd near Alkôsh have rebuilt part of the monastery on the plain, which travellers by the permission of the father superior use as a khân, and the monks told me on November 30, 1890, that every load of lime had to be brought thither from the place some miles away where it was burnt and crushed. The new portion of the building is very good and substantial, and the lime church is a fine specimen of its kind. Any one who has seen a mountain monastery in the East will understand the difficulties which stand in the way of building a church or monastery, and will readily perceive that the objection of the monks of Bêth 'Âbhê to the pulling down of their church was not unnatural. The lack of roads and means of transport, the delays caused by the cold of winter and the heat of summer, and the large sums of money required for a building like a church would cause greater and wealthier men than the head of a decaying monastery to pause before beginning such a work.

they wished to steal from that earth, and to plaster¹ their cells with it; and since Îshô^c-yahbh wished to be relieved from the expense and trouble of having the earth carried away himself he remained the whole of that Sabbath in the patriarchal cell, and he proclaimed concerning himself, "I am suffering from sickness". Now when [the monks] discovered this opportunity, with laughing and rejoicing they stole away that earth, even sweeping the place where it had stood with a broom, and carried it to their cells. And when Îshô^c-yahbh heard concerning this thing he rejoiced with an exceeding great joy, [p. 207] and when he came and saw that the place where the earth had been was swept and sprinkled, with a chaste and holy smile he answered and said to them, "Ye have not so much as left behind even a little of that earth; may the Lord pardon and forgive us all!"

CHAPTER X.

OF HOW GOD, THE LORD OF ALL, MOVED MEN TO PUT FORTH THEIR HANDS TO OPPOSE THIS GREAT WORK.

Now when the holy Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh had begun to lay the foundations of this temple, the materials [required] and the wages which had to be given to the labourers and the builders became more and more day by day. And because, according to the report which I have received by tradition, he had taken upon himself to build [the temple] in difficult times, there rose up a certain governor and ruler of the dominion of Mōsul, a greedy and avaricious man, who afflicted this monastery by the workings of envious devils, and who mulcted this congregation of fifteen thousand silver¹ [pieces]. And moreover the believing men of Adiabene were smitten with envy against [Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh], and said, "Why, while the Metropolitan throne of Adiabene is going to ruin, dost thou build a temple in Bêth^c Âbhê"? All these things [happened] by the counsel of Satan. Also in this assembly when [Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh] was sitting at table on one of the feast days with the brethren, in the common room, some of them, being incited thereto by certain mischief-makers, rebelled² against him, saying, "Thou hast pulled down our temple, and we no longer want thee to build a temple for us; get thee out and depart from our monastery. [p. 208] We are under [the authority of] the Patriarch, pass on to thine own dominion, and tarry no longer amongst us". And when the humble and gentle man perceived secretly the working of Satan the Evil One, he said to them, "May God forgive you. It is not you [who] are speaking these things but that being who hath never tasted peace, and who delighteth not in peace. I shall not depart, unless ye drag me out on my feet, until I shall have built this holy temple". And he spake this also unto them, "When I began to pull down the first temple, our Lord knoweth that I was master of one hundred and fifty zûzê;¹ but for all these expenses which ye see, for behold [only] one half of the building has been completed, I do not know where our Lord hath made ready: but quiet yourselves, and fret not with care and anxiety, for our Lord will build for Himself without taking anything either from you or from your common funds.

CHAPTER XI.

OF THE SATANIC VISION WHICH [ABBÂ] ÎSHÔ^c-DÂDH, ONE OF THE OLD MEN OF THIS CONGREGATION SAW, AND OF THE MONEY WHICH HE FOUND.

Now the holy Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh was in trouble and anxiety concerning the expenses, for the first day of the week was near in which the builder would ask him for seven thousand zûzê, being the wages of himself and of his workmen, according to the contract for the work which he had taken upon himself [to do] for him. And the brethren saw him during the after-supper service of the first day of the week with a gloomy face, and his colour was green by reason of weariness, [p. 209] and care and anxiety, because the morrow after the first day of the week was the time fixed for weighing to the builders seven thousand zûzê, although as has already been said, he had not a single zûzâ in his possession. Now what did He Who hath the power, and to Whom nothing is difficult, do? He uncovered before him hidden and buried and hoarded up treasures, and placed them in his hand without labour and without toil.

Now there was in the monastery Abbâ¹ Îshô^c-dâdh, an old man, the master of Mâr George² the Catholicus, and the master of Mâr Abraham³ the Catholicus our Father,⁴ and his cell was [situated] on the top of the ridge [of the mountain] which is between two valleys, to the right as thou goest up to the head of the spring, and opposite to the fortress which is called the 'Little'.⁵ And when the service of the night was ended, he went up at the conclusion of the psalms for the morning to his cell, and as he was going along the path God's goodness moved him, and he looked to his right hand, towards the east, and he saw in an uninhabited and ruined cell a fire burning in its little oven; and just as the blessed Moses said,¹ "I will go and see this great sight, why the bush burneth not", so also the blessed man thought, "What can be the cause of this fire which now burneth in the ruined cell? I will go there and see". And when he had come near, he saw Satan in the form of a black old man eating bread which he baked on the oven, and because, according to what I have learned about this whole matter from the holy Mâr Abraham the Catholicus, he was a mighty and a holy man, he adjured Satan by the word of our Lord to depart. And straightway that oven was rent in twain, and an earthen jar² full of zûzê was cast forth at the feet of Abbâ Îshô^c-dâdh; [p. 210] and it broke immediately, and the zûzê poured out with a chinking sound³, and he bowed low to the ground before God lest peradventure it was a phantasm. And when the zûzê had been felt by his hands, and he knew of a certainty that it was money in very truth, he took the cross which was upon his neck, and buried it among them; and the blessed old man girded up his feet, and ran swiftly from the one valley to the other valley until he arrived at the cell of Rabban. And he knocked at the door, and the monk⁴ who guarded the door answered him, and he said to him, "Go in and tell Mār Īshō^c-yahbh that Īshō^c-dād̄h is at the door". And the Metropolitan answered and said, "What can the old man¹ want of us at this time [of night]"? And the old man having gone in, said, "Rise up, for thy prayer hath been heard. I saw thy face of despair in the evening and during the after-supper service, and I knew that thou wast in need, and I offered prayer on thy behalf to Christ that He would not allow thy face to be put to the blush". And when he had learned concerning that which had happened, Mār Īshō^c-yahbh answered and said, "Perhaps it is a phantasm of devils". And [Mār Īshō^c-dād̄h] said to him, "Master, I went down on my knees before God, and I also felt² the zûzê, and I placed the cross which was upon me among them; rise up and let us go [to the ruined cell] before it dawns [when] we should be seen".

which were scattered about in the neighbouring mountains, although they belonged to the congregation of the monastery. The anchorites or solitaries, مَسْكِين, who lived in these cells, were accustomed to go to the church of the monastery on certain occasions and on Sundays to partake of the Eucharist. The ذَمَّجِي were the monks who lived in cells, which were separate from each other, but which were grouped round about the church, the whole cluster of buildings comprising the جَمْعِي, or residence in common. The مَدْمَدِي, with its outlying cells, was a later development of monastic dwelling; compare what is said of Job the Monk (he flourished about A. D. 550), وَمَكَسَى الْأَعْمَارَ وَالْقَلَالَى, "and he founded coenobia and cells, which formerly were like unto places where monks dwelt in common." See *B. day¹ of the appointed week, on the fourth day of which the builder was to come to ask for thirteen thousand zûzê, arrived. And the [bones of] the back of the pious Mâr Îshô'-yahbh were broken by reason of his fear, and he brought to the God of the universe a cry that He would not be unmindful of His temple, and that he himself might not become an object of derision like that foolish builder who began to build and was not able to finish.² And when the first day of the week had passed by, the builder began to say to the Metropolitan, "Make ready the zûzê, and do not forget"; now by reason of this [speech] also, the trouble of the Metropolitan was increased, because the builder, who was a heretic,³ wished to make him a laughing-stock. And [the Metropolitan] answered and said, "Be not avaricious, behold, the zûzê are weighed out, and are set aside for thee;" but although he uttered courageous words with his mouth, he bore grief and sorrow in his heart. Now there was a very old man [who lived] opposite the monastery from Gâr Kâhnê,⁴ and he also was moved by grace to give what he had by him for the building of the temple. And on the morning of the third day of the week he rose up, leaning upon his staff,—now he was a man who was [only] able to come to the temple to receive the Holy Mysteries [p. 212] once a week—and with the morning he knocked at the door of the Patriarchal cell; and the keeper of the door answered him, and made known [to the Metropolitan] concerning him. And the Metropolitan being moved at the report of his coming went out to meet him, and answered and said to him, "Rabban, why hast thou taken all this great trouble to come to me? If thou hadst any reason thou shouldst have sent to me that I might come to thee". The old man said, "However great may be the love and ready disposition which we have to bestow upon each other, the treasury of the Giver is rich enough to recompense us all for our love; but I entreat thee this day to take the trouble to go down to [my] cell which thou seest". The Metropolitan saith to him, "During all this long time which I have been with thee thou hast never asked me to go down to thy cell, until this day in which destruction taketh away my life"; [the old man] saith to him, "Rise up, and be not distressed, for the deliverance of thy Lord is at hand". And when the Metropolitan heard this, [it was] as if peace came upon his soul; now he was accustomed to receive such-like [consolation] from [the conversation] of Abbâ Îshô^c-dâdh. And he rose up and went down with the old man, [who] said to him, "Take this monk with thee, for we shall have need of him"; and he went down [with them] according to his word. And when the breaking of bread drew nigh and he was urging him to take some refreshment,¹ it was not easy for him to make the Metropolitan take any. And the old man answered and said to him, "For how much money wilt thou sell me the keeping of thy fast this day? Know also that we monks are under thy control, and that we know the time for keeping [the fast], and the time and season for the loosing of love". And when they had eaten and drunk the old man said to him, "Mâr Metropolitan, I saw thee in the spirit standing in a dark house, and thou wast calling us all to thy help, [p. 213] and I knew that thou wast in sore need of money for the expenses of the building of the temple. And I swear¹ by the prayer of Rabban that I possessed neither gold nor silver, for by the labour of my hands have I ministered unto my life day by day as thou² knowest. But I have a small sum of money deposited with me, and if thou wilt promise to pay it back I will give it to thee". The Metropolitan said to him, "How much is that which is deposited with thee, father"? and he said to him, "I swear by [our] love, that I know not. Two old women who were going to Jerusalem from my own country of Bêth Bêghâsh came to me some twenty years ago, and placed in my hands this napkin;³ but how much is that something which they placed [in my hands] I know not, only I know that it is much. And they went and never came back. And they commanded me, saying, 'If we return, this something belongeth to us, but if we are smitten by death on the journey, then give it to this monastery'. Take then this something, and if they return,—but they will never return—thou must pay it back; and if on the other hand they do not return, there will be none to ask it from thee, and thou wilt not need to pay it back". And when the Metropolitan heard [these things] he received it all with joy, and he weighed the money, which amounted to thirteen thousand zûzê, and gave it to the builders in all gladness. Now I have heard these things from many, and as I have learned [them] so have I set [them] down in the writing of the history of the holy Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh.

CHAPTER XIII.

OF THE MIRACLE WHICH CHRIST WROUGHT BY THE HANDS
OF THE HOLY MÂR ÎSHÔ^c-YAHBH.

Now when the blessed man Îshô^c-yahbh was building this holy temple, every man was extending help to him by his labour, and by gifts from what he possessed, the rich man according to his large means, and the poor man according to his small means. And there was a certain gardener in the village of Hâdhûdh, and this man, as I have learned concerning him, was deaf, and this [affliction] had happened to him from the days of his youth; and having expended much money upon physicians that he might be cured, he was disappointed in this expectation. Now this man also, together with the other people who were contributing from their wares, brought to the monastery a load of onions. And when they received his gift there was here a monk who was acquainted with him, and he took him and carried him to the Patriarchal cell, to the Metropolitan, that he might be blessed by him; and he made known to the holy man concerning the gift which he had brought, and that he could not hear at all. And the Metropolitan was very sorry for him, and he made for him a washing from the cross of Rabban, and dismissed him, saying, "We trust in our Lord that He will give thee [the power of] hearing". And when he had mounted his ass and had gone forth, he arrived at the ascent where the young asses run about, and he heard the noise of the wild goats which fled frightened, and again he marvelled and was astonished, for he heard also the sound of the footsteps of the ass. And when he had drawn nigh to the village, and he, being filled with wonder and amazement, heard the crowing of the cocks and the barking of the dogs, because of his joy he could not believe that which had happened to him. But when he went into the door of his courtyard, one of his children saw him, [p. 215] and he heard the child say to his mother, "Father hath come;" and he made known to his wife all these things; thus was he healed by the prayers of that holy man, and he was whole until his death. Now this [story] I heard from the old and venerable Rabban Elisha; may his memory be blessed! It is well known that wonders and miracles were wrought also by all the holy men whose histories I have written, but time in its course¹ hath covered them up because they were not written down at the time by those who were acquainted with them.

OF THE COMPLETION OF THE TEMPLE, AND OF THE DEATH
OF MÂR ÎSHÔ^c-YAHBH.

Now when the temple was entirely built except the roof, he left off for that year, and waited so that the building might settle down, and in the following year he finished both it and the martyrium, and consecrated it. And he removed [the bodies of] Rabban Jacob, and Mâr Catholicus and the fathers who were with them, and laid them in the martyrium. And he had made up his mind, if life had been granted to him, to [re]build the monastery generally¹ and the porter's lodge with stones and lime. But after the fast of our Lord, on the Friday which cometh after the Sunday of renewal,² the hymn for which [begins], "In the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ", he put off the garment of the body and the weight of its afflictions, and he departed to the land of light and gladness; and he was laid with the fathers his companions in the dwelling

CHAPTER XV.

THE HISTORY OF THE HOLY MÂR CYRIACUS, THE HEAD OF THE MONASTERY OF BÊTH 'ÂBHÊ AND BISHOP OF THE CITY OF BÂLÂDH.

The composition of man testifieth that the constitution of [his] mortal nature hath received from Him Who alone is, two opposing parts, between which there is [always] contention, because each endeavoureth always to attract its fellow to itself, and according to its twofold character He hath prepared two habitations for it. This [dwelling], viz., that in which we now are, He hath set for the training and exercise of our rational nature, so that by severe strivings we may gain possession of some of the treasure of contest, and become rich in those things which befit our rational nature, and the honour with which we are honoured; but that [dwelling] for which we look, hath He prepared for [our] delight and for [our] happiness which shall be beyond all change, that we may live a life, without the least [inclination] to turn aside¹ from it, in a dwelling which is meet to endure for ever. And He hath given [us] power and might to possess both these [dwellings] unless our own personal matters should hinder our freewill choice, and therefore the choice of good things and of the inheritance of the happiness which is expected [to come] belongeth to us.

Now the blessed Rabban Mâr Cyriacus, the glorious things concerning whom we have now come to relate, having understood this, laboured abundantly, in this world full of strife, and abounding in contests, and through this behaviour he followed after, and acquired, [p. 217] and traded in all those things which are convenient for and befit that rest which, according to the word of the divine Paul,¹ is preserved for us in heaven, whence we expect our Vivifier, our Lord Jesus Christ, Who shall change the body of our humility, that it may become like unto His glorious body.

OF THE ORIGIN OF THE BLESSED MÂR CYRIACUS, AND OF HIS COMING TO THIS MONASTERY [OF BÊTH 'ÂBHÊ].

This blessed man Cyriacus was descended from a family of Gebhîltâ, an orthodox city in the country of Ṭârîhân,² and he was the son of wealthy people who were diligent worshippers in the fear of God. Through the care of his parents he was trained in doctrine in the church of their native city, before the famous and much enlightened teacher Rabban Gûryâ,³ a disciple of the master of masters, Rabban Bâbhai, the teacher and founder of schools.⁴ And wishing to lead the life of an ascetic, and to inscribe himself for spiritual labour among the hosts of those who do battle against the body and the lusts thereof, he heard concerning this holy monastery from his teacher Rabban Gûryâ,¹ who had heard and learned from Rabban Bâbhai concerning its famous and holy men, and how their course of life shone with splendour, for Rabban Bâbhai drew every man to the sight of the glorious light of their excellent virtues. And Mâr Cyriacus went forth, and made straight the path of his journey, and arrived at this monastery when Rabban Mâr Ahâ, the glorious acts of whose life we have written a little way back,² was its head. [p. 218] And when he had finished his period of serving in the monastery, the holy Mâr Ahâ permitted him to go forth to a [separate] cell, and he was endowed with prayers and blessings, and he dwelt in silence. Now if I came to write down all that I have heard concerning him, and concerning the chastity and abstinence of his life, and his labours, and his toils difficult to bear and to carry out, it would be great and heavy work both for me to write, and for thee to read, [O 'Abhd-Îshô^c]; but I will pass over them briefly, giving examples of them as it were in short hand,³ and I will make selections from them referring to different matters, and will lay them [before thee] to please thee.

Now the old man Hênân-Îshô^c, the head of the congregation, whom I met in this place, and who was his neighbour, related to me that from the day in which he went forth to his cell, until the end of his life, wine never entered therein, and that he only took it at table and behold thou wilt be at peace from this passion;" and the other strap [was] for binding round one knee when he was standing in the vigil of prayer. And he used to bend one knee like a camel, and bind it round with the smaller strap, and with the sole¹ of the foot bent, and holding a rod, [he stood] in that painful [position] on one leg² like a crane,³ that is a ḳēlâkesâ,⁴ until he was worn out by exhaustion⁵ and fell down; then he rose up and changed the [leather] ligature to the other leg until he was wearied, and thus he kept his vigil until dawn.⁶ And the old man Ḥenân-Îshô told me, saying, "Inasmuch as the situation of my own

tion upon the hour of judgment, and meditation upon the hour of Gehenna; three [subjects for] anxious thought, and three [subjects for] meditation, spiritual and mental, for which monks in very truth should have a care, for by them is a monk preserved and exalted, and by them he mounteth to the grade of perfection. Now in this world perfection is given as a pledge,¹ not by insensibility to passions, God forbid, but by not being subject unto them.

Now when the mind of this our holy father had been trained and exercised in these things for a long time, the covering of the passions was lifted off from his mind, and his mind shone, and his understanding became bright, and he became wise to guard the treasures of his success by the watchfulness of his soul. "For a man to labour in the virtues," saith one of the Saints, "is an easy thing [to do], but to preserve them from spoliation belongeth to the perfect." Wherefore also when God the Lord of all saw that [Mâr Cyriacus] with all his heart and with all his soul had committed himself to keep His commandments, and to fulfil His will, he honoured and glorified him by the miracles which he wrought, and by the revelations which he received, and by the other mighty things which took place by his hands; now this [honour] was not given to [any] other person in his time, and little by little, by the might of his prayer, I shall demonstrate this fact.

¹ ܕܫܡܝܢܐ ܕܡܫܝܚܐ "like a pledge." This word is not in any native lexicon known to me.

CHAPTER XVII.

OF THE CALL OF OUR FATHER RABBAN CYRIACUS TO THE HEADSHIP OF THE MONASTERY.

Now since for the sake of the truth the holy Mâr Cyriacus chose labours such as these, and afflictions which humble the body, and bore, according to the word of Mark the Monk, the suffering of the bending of the legs and back, that he might follow after his Master along the Apostolic road, being bound with chains and carrying [his] cross;—that is to say, having driven out from himself all passions, and having endured¹ the afflictions which [arose] from this patience in the knowledge of the truth, in the hope of the good things which [were to come] afterwards,—he made his mind like a swift eagle, which mounteth up with gladness in the upper heights, and he bowed the eyes of his body beneath the yoke of the burden of Christ, that they might not stray to lying sights.

Now when there was a seeking for a head to stand up in this congregation, the choice and agreement of the whole brotherhood [fell] upon him to hold the office of head over them,² and with much labour they established him, and entrusted to him the direction³ of the manner of their lives. And he established overseers to superintend non-spiritual matters, and he himself sat in the Abbot's cell according to the custom of asceticism, there being brought to him every evening, according to tradition, a piece of bread and an onion to send to Simon Peter on behalf of the life of Tabitha, and also the angel [that told] Cornelius to send to Simon Peter¹ that the light of the doctrine of Christ might come to him, appeared to that Ishmaelite in a vision, and said to him, "There is a monk, in the Monastery of Bêth 'Âbhê, send and bring him, and he shall heal thy son;" and when he heard this he went for help to Mâr Mâran-zëkhâ, Bishop of Nineveh, and entreated him to send and bring the monk to him. [p. 223] And when he asked him, "What is the name of the monk who appeared to thee?" he told him, saying, "His name is not known to me." And the pious Mâr Mâran-zëkhâ, holy in all things, wrote a letter to the holy Mâr Cyriacus that he would send "a means of grace"² to that man, and he wrote also how he had appeared to him in a vision; and the blessed Cyriacus sent a washing from the cross of Rabban by the hands of two brethren, and he gave himself to prayer on behalf [of the Arab's son]. Now when those two brethren had departed and had given the "means of grace" and God's mercy which they had with them to the man, and he had made his son drink it, the boy straightway stood up, and asked for food; and his parents marvelled, and they praised and glorified God. And this [matter] was proclaimed in all the city, and the holy man Cyriacus became famous and well known.

² ميا literally means "misericordia," but here it refers to the holy water which the Nestorians were accustomed to give to the sick to drink, or to "pulvis loci, ubi martyres coronati fuerunt, quem oleo et aqua dilutum ad extremam unctionem adhibent." See the passages and authorities quoted in Payne Smith, Thes., coll. 1315, 1316.

CHAPTER XIX.

OF HOW THAT MAN CAME TO THIS MONASTERY, AND OF HOW HE REWARDED IT WITH A NOBLE RECOMPENSE, AS WAS MEET, [AND OF THE REST OF THE MIRACLES OF THE HOLY MÂR CYRIACUS].

Now just as by reason of the glorious crown of sublime things with which the nation of the Jews was crowned after their going up from Babylon, it is written in the prophet Zechariah, "The nations which dwell in many towns shall come, and the inhabitants of one [city] shall go to another, and shall say, 'Come, let us go and pray before the Lord;' and many peoples and mighty nations shall come to entreat the Lord, the mighty One, in Jerusalem.¹ And ten men, from all the tongues of the nations, shall take hold of the skirt of a man who is a Jew, and shall say to him 'Let us go with thee to Jerusalem, [p. 224] for we have heard that the Lord is with thee,'" even thus was it wrought in this case. For when that man saw that he had gotten back his son safe and sound from the mouth of the grave, and from the maw of hell by means of God's "mercy" which had been sent to him, he decided rightly, saying, "I will go and reward with [gifts of] love and kindness him who hath done this act of grace for me, and who hath delivered and given to me out of the teeth of death the only branch which I possess, and the staff of my old age, because of this thing;" and he took his son and a number of his servants, and others joining themselves to them they became a great company, and he came to this monastery. Now when the brethren took the old man to Rabban in the Abbot's cell, as soon as he had gone in and seen him, he answered and said in the Arabic tongue, "This is the old man whom I saw proclaiming to me 'peace', and saying, 'Send to Bêth 'Âbhê, and bring from there a monk and he shall heal thy son'"; and wonder took hold upon every man. And he took out ten thousand zûzê, and gave to Rabban, but Rabban thought wisely, "If I take all this money the gift will become a loss." And he answered and said to him, "Blessed art thou before God, O old man, and blessed shalt thou be; but we do not require this [money], for it is not good that the healing which our Lord hath given us should be [sold] for money." And the old man with entreaties and tears spake, saying, "If thou dost not take them, I will throw them away, for one nail of my son which through thy prayers hath been restored to me, is better to me than all the money and riches which I possess." Rabban said to him, "Since it must be thus, give the money to such and such a merchant who hath [a debt]¹ against us, and thy act of grace will be acceptable unto God the Lord of all, and to us." The Arab saith to him, "How much hath he against you?" and he said, [p. 225] "Eight thousand [zûzê];" and he left here two thousand [zûzê], and [with] the remainder he went and paid the debt, anxiety concerning the payment of which troubled the monks greatly; and thus were those men dismissed, and they went away rejoicing.

The very old man Rabban Îshô'-yahbh, [surnamed] the Long, who had received the tonsure at the hands of Rabban Cyriacus related to me the following:—"One day at the time of the after-supper service on the first day of the week I was selected by the potter¹ to go to the spring,² and to bring water³ to the tank⁴ of the monastery. And there was a certain old man who was called Bakhôs (Bacchus) bar-Ḳuṣṭôî,⁵ and he had near⁶ his cell a large olive tree from which he pressed out thirty measures of oil every year, and the tree was therefore precious to him, and he took care of it, and never missed watering it. Now this man was spying upon me, and watching my footsteps; and when I had gone some distance from his cell, he went out secretly, and opened⁷ the channel and drew off water and brought it into his cell to water the olive tree. And when I had come and had made the water to flow in the channel towards the monastery, and was going away to follow along with the water, through [my] fear of the others, [this old man] went out, being moved so to do by his greediness, and made an opening in the channel to let in the water to his cell. And when I saw this piece of folly, the fear lest the potter should beat me being vividly depicted before my eyes, it was exceedingly grievous unto me. And behold the blessed Cyriacus was in the place of the after-supper service,¹ and he heard my voice complaining, and he asked me, 'What aileth thee, my son?' And I said to him, 'The monks will not allow the water to come to the monastery.' Now Rabban Cyriacus was, as every one hath told me, of a hot-tempered disposition, [p. 226] and was [easily] made furious with anger, and when he was moved to wrath he was not to be controlled. And he straightway came down in haste from the place of the after-supper service, and went along by the side of the water, and found that it ran into the place where Bacchus was. And he cried out, saying, 'Bacchus, Bacchus;' now Bacchus was silent, and was dried up through his terror. And Cyriacus answered and said, 'Because I see that this olive tree hindereth thee from pleasing God, even as that fig tree which was in the monastery of the blessed Pachomius became a stumbling-block to the simple youths [there], and because, moreover, while every one [else] is occupied in the after-supper service, thou art corrupting the Calumniator² by [thy] solicitude for thy olive tree, the life which maketh thy olive tree to grow shall be taken from it, and the earth in which are its roots shall become salt and dried up, and God shall make it wither during this night, and thou shalt have no gratification from it except wood for burning and [for making] a roof;’ and so, with the morning of the [next] day, he found that olive tree dried up from its roots, and black as pitch.”

And again, a very old man whose name was Tûmânâ related to me that there was a certain monk employed in the monastery whose name was Khusrau, and that it was customary every week for a monk employed in the monastery to be set apart for the purpose of waiting upon that holy old¹ man in Rabban’s cell. Now it happened that one week this Khusrau was set apart [for this duty]. And when he had stood at the door two or three days, and he could not endure [the service], he came to the monastery to his companions without the knowledge of the old man. And when the evening was come, and the blessed old man was waiting for him to bring him [his] food, Khusrau neglected him and treated him with contempt. And behold, the old man holding his staff came himself to the monastery—now Khusrau by reason of his fear had laid himself down upon a bed,² and feigned himself to be sick—[p. 227] and Rabban called him, “Khusrau, Khusrau,” and he answered him saying, “Master, a fever hath seized me,” And Rabban replied, saying, “I trust in our Lord that if the fever hath seized thee in very truth,

He will visit thee and heal thee by the prayers of Rabban Jacob; but if thou hast spoken contrary [to the truth], may a mighty fever come upon thee;" and he left him and departed. And the old man who told me this thing asseverated with oaths that Khusrau began at once to cry out and to shriek and to beat upon his head with his hands like a man who was [actually] afflicted, and his life was near to be destroyed if we had not run and besought forgiveness for him from the holy man, who sent him a "mercy" (ܡܝܫܝܚܐ), and straightway he was relieved.

And after this there was set apart for his service Jacob bar-Bâbhânôsh,¹ who was surnamed² "the sacristan's son," with whom I was also contemporary for many years, and [Rabban] knew beforehand that he would not be an upright man, and every time that he saw him he was pointing him out with his finger to those round about him, and saying, "This Jacob bar-Bâbhânôsh hath broken the yoke and cut the ropes which tied it upon his neck,"³ and thus also did we know him. I have also heard concerning him from the aged men, that he neither drew near to the laborious life of asceticism, nor embraced it. And in the time of his old age when the "sacristan's son" was forced to celebrate the sacrament standing by the priest in the capacity of a deacon¹—now he used to sit [basking] in the portico² of the nave of the church the whole day—and when he went in to celebrate, and the wafers were laid in the paten³ upon the altar, he used to steal some of them and place [them] in his bosom; and thus he did many times until at last we perceived him. And from every cell into which he entered—for every man used to invite [him] in to rest himself, [p. 228] taking pity on his old age—if its master⁴ went away a short distance from before him he took something, and placed it in his bosom; and in this manner of life he died.

Rabban Īshō^c-yahbh, who was surnamed the ‘Long’, also related to me that there lived in this monastery a certain solitary named Rabban Sergius, an old man and the head of the ministration,⁵ with whom also I was contemporary. And it came to pass one day that this old man met Rabban Cyriacus as he was going into the colonnade⁶ from the temple, and as he himself was

And Rabban Īshô'-yahbh swore to me that straightway Satan smote him in the place of the watchers, and tore off his skin from him by jerking him along upon the walls,¹ until the monks went in to him by reason of the noise of his cries. And it was thus until the end of his life, and even when he stood up in the service in the temple leaning upon his staff, fifty years after Rabban had cursed him, he was afflicted as he stood, and he foamed, and his spittle came out [of his mouth] and ran down upon his beard; and although he was an upright man until his death, according to the word of the holy man concerning him, he found no rest.

And a certain evil and ill-natured Arab who was passing from the mountains to the city came to this monastery with a large company of followers, [p. 229] and he had with him a hunting² dog which he had brought with him as a gift for one of the chiefs who were his superiors; and having tied him up in the

² Probably a fine specimen of the greyhound family. To this day in and around Mōṣul these dogs are much used for hunting purposes, but I regret to say that when they become old the natives turn them out to starve in the streets or to be worried to death by the young and vigorous pariah dogs. They are often taken to Bagdad as gifts for Pashas.

And when it was morning, and [the Arab] saw that his dog was dead, he was greatly grieved, and he began to abuse and to threaten the monks, and also to demand from them the price of the dog, saying, "Ye have killed him." And when the monks had gone in for necessary purposes, and the Arab was still threatening them, and his striving was becoming more violent, they went to the cell of Rabban, and informed him of the matter. And he took the abbot's staff and came, and when he went in and saw the Arab he said to him, "Why art thou thus enraged,² and why dost thou threaten us?" And the Arab said, "Because ye have killed the dog which I brought [with me] with such great trouble." Rabban said to him, "Now if thy dog be not dead thou wilt ask nothing from us?" And the Arab said, "God forbid that I should importune you in anything." And the blessed old man asked for the dog, and they shewed him to him lying outside; and he said to the Arab, "Thy dog is not dead; rise up, and do thou and thy companions mount your animals, and I will wake up thy dog and he shall go with thee." And when the Arab had mounted Rabban went and pricked the dog with the top of his staff, saying, "Rise up, dead dog, and die outside of our territory;" and straightway the dog stood up. And all those Arabs saw and marvelled, and they threw a bark-rope³ over him, and took him away and when he came to the Edhrê dhě Bâlâs¹ the dog died. Thus those men went away having harmed [us] in nothing.

One year when the wheat [which was] the property of the monastery was being brought from Bêth Zîwâ, and by reason of the heat [of the day] the overseers were urging the labourers to get up to work in the morning while it was yet dark, they complained, saying, "There is a lion in the reedy swamp,² and we are afraid to go forth by night because of him." [p. 230] And when the blessed man learned [this], he took his staff and went on foot before them, and behold they came to the head of the reedy swamp, and the lion himself was there. And the holy man answered and said to him, "In the name of our Lord Jesus, to Whom all things are subject, mayest thou never be found here [again]; if I see thee here another day I will smote thee with hard blows." And he answered and said to the labourers, "From henceforth fear not, and walk hither by day and by night freely;" and it came to pass according to the word of the holy man, and during all that time that lion was never seen there. Now these things were related to me by the old man Hĕnân-Îshô^c who was surnamed the "Red".

This man also related to me that there was a certain widow from the village of Tîdôr, and that [one day] she was collecting the scattered ears after the reapers with her young son; now this lad was her only son.

And it came to pass that the boy fell down suddenly in the field by reason of an evil spirit which had seized him in his heart, and he died, and [his sad case] moved every one to weep for him. And the monks who were reaping counselled her, saying, "If thou wilt take him to the monastery, to the head of the monastery, he will make thy son to live again." And she lifted up her son upon an ass before her, and she went along quickly and laid him at the door of the abbot's cell, in which the blessed man was at that moment, and she began to weep dolefully, and to call him by his name, and to adjure [him], saying, "O Father Cyriacus, have mercy upon [me] a wretched woman, have mercy¹ on the stranger,² for the root³ from which life was extended for me has been cut off from me like a dried up tree. [p. 231] O spare the woman who looketh [for help] to the hope of thy prayer, and turn not away thy face from me, that He also may not turn His face away from thy petition in the hour when thou knockest at His door. Be thou sorrowful for the wretched old widow, for there is no life for me now that the light of my eyes, and the breath of my life, and the touching of my hands,⁴ and the steps of my feet, and the maintenance and protector of my life [hath departed]. and listen to my voice, even as thy Lord, Who hearkened to the Canaanitish¹ woman, and to Whom the sin of the harlot² was not an abominable thing." Now while the woman was at the door and was making use of such [words] as these, and was at the same time crying and weeping with plaintive lamentation, he had no monk from the monastery with him at that time, and he himself opened the door and saw the dead body of her son, and she herself was sitting crying before it. And he answered and said to her, "What have I to do with thee, O woman, and what have I in my hands wherewith to help thee?" And he took her son and brought him unto his cell, and when he had remained a long time in prayer and supplication, the Lord gave to the holy man the soul of that child; and he gave him back to his mother alive, and she took him with great joy and praise, and returned to the field. And this [miracle] was proclaimed throughout all the country. And it also happened to that blessed man by the hand of God that it was not³ necessary for him to work his miracles openly, and [therefore] he hid himself being afraid of vainglory, and he plucked out this foul affection from⁴ the dross of his thoughts, and cast it far, far away. Now although a short way back I said that the Lord honoured this holy man, so that before and after him there was none like unto him, there are nevertheless other [saints], and I did not make this decision in respect of all men, nor did I by any means intend it to include all the saints; [p. 232] I only intended to say that by reason of the miracles which took place at his hands he was superior to all who lived in his time in this monastery. And if thy mind, [O 'Abhd-Îshô'] will hearken unto my argument it shall be convinced [of this fact].

And there was in this monastery one of the elders who was surnamed Solomon bar-Sabhëthâ, who was a spectator of the miracle which we are about to relate; now the account of [this miracle] was handed down from his mouth to us, for we never knew this man in this life. And he used to relate [it] to all those from whom I have heard it, saying, "When Rabban Cyriacus was the head of the monastery, I was the steward. And when the commemoration of Rabban Jacob¹ came, he gathered together the twenty-two schools of Margâ, [concerning] which also Mâr Abraham the Catholicus, of holy memory, and blessed in all things, said to me, 'There existed in Margâ at that time, and flourished a great congregation, without number.' And I, Solomon, say that when I saw that the multitudes were very great I was afraid to give out wine in abundance in the butler's closet² according to custom; now Rabban himself was sitting with the butlers and those who laid the tables. And when the monks in the monastery came to me to the wine cellar,³ and I had given them wine to carry away once, and again a second time,

Estwân,¹ that we may go and obtain wine from them. And when, by the hand of God, we have celebrated the festival which standeth [at hand], we will bring wine and pay them back'; and he left me and went to the temple, as I was wondering and amazed at his words. And because we had experience of him in all things, I accounted this [thing] likewise as one of his many glorious acts, and I did according to his word which never failed. And I took two soldiers² with me, and [Rabban] went before us along the road which goeth to the Zâbhâ [Zâb], and although he was on foot in front of us and we were riding we did not overtake him. And when we arrived at the appointed place by the Zâb he asked me, 'Have ye brought with you any earthenware vessel?' and I said to him, 'Why do we want such a thing?' He said to me, 'That we might borrow the wine through it, and pay it back through it.' Now the vessel which he asked for [was that] with which we used to fill the skin bottles from the Zâb. And when we came to the water he said to me, 'Tarry here with thy companions, for I am going to see if that caravan is still there;' and when we had been sitting by the Zâb some time, behold the blessed man came to us, and there breathed forth from him likely that a caravan going from Kûfa and Bagdad to Âdhôrbâigân by way of Arbela would cross the Zâb and make a circuit by Môsul. On the other hand a local caravan from Hêdhattâ would cross the Zâb pretty soon and make its way into Margâ. For ܩܫܩܩܐ, then, we should probably read ܩܫܩܩܐ, to which the readings of BC point.

an odour which surpassed all scents, and fear and wonder fell upon us. And he answered, like one in distress and said to me, 'My son, according to what I have learned, those men passed by last evening and have gone away; but that our journey may not be in vain, fill the bottles from the Zâb and let us go [home];' and we did according to his word. Now the villagers who were with me began to laugh secretly, saying, 'Instead of wine we shall take water, which is much cooler than that of the monastery, for the blessed men.' And while he was walking on before us we were laughing over the water which we were carrying with so much care, and when we came to the monastery he said to me, [p. 234] 'Take the loads into the wine cellar, and take heed unto them.' And we left [him], and he went to the temple, and I dismissed the villagers also from my presence. And I pondered that it could not be by accident and for nothing that so great a man as this, a man who knew the secrets of [all] hearts, who brought the dead to life, and who had done and still doeth other marvellous deeds, was moved to bring water from the Zâb; and I rose up and lit a lamp, and I opened the ear of one of the bottles, and behold there breathed forth the smell of wine, the like of which he used to say, "before our Lord, I never smelt from any other wine." And I praised and glorified the might of Christ, Who had given the power and the promise to His disciples that they should work miracles even as He did;¹ and I also determined that I would not reveal the matter to any man, and that I would not give out this wine to be drunk, either to-day or to-morrow, until this old¹ wine which we had brought from the mountain should be finished. Now when the service of the Mysteries was ended, and every one had gone into the common-room of the brethren, Rabban sent to me, saying, 'Bring into the common-room some of that good wine which thou hast, and give up the intention which thou didst decide upon during the night'. And at this [speech] also I was the more moved to the praise of God the Lord of all, in that Rabban could see beforehand and know by the eye of the Spirit even the motions² of the thoughts of my mind."

Now it came to pass one year that Rabban himself was obliged to carry the imperial³ tax which was due from this monastery to Yazdînbadh,⁴ a village of Margâ, and taking with him one of the monks in the monastery they both departed. And while the blessed old man, by reason of his age and feebleness, was riding upon an ass, and the monk was marching behind, the monk meditated the following thought:—"The head of the monastery hath not done well in carrying with him all this money to the government without five other men coming with us; [p. 235] alas for the evilness of the times, and alas for thieves! Peradventure we shall meet with some opposition which we shall not be able to stand against." And that holy man turned, and looked at the monk, and said to him, "Why art thou doubtful about the hidden protector who is with us, my son, just as if the providence of

Since now [this] ascetic² had become like unto an altar of prayer, and with his secret, inner man his mind had burned [upon it] ceaselessly the incense of psalms and hymns of praise to the exalted Godhead,—like the Watchers (i. e., Angels) on high whose chain of praises before the throne of Godhead is never severed,—like the spiritual powers he became wise and understanding, by the revelations which were hovering round about him abundantly, and he saw things which were afar off,³ and prophesied concerning things which were about to happen, even as the blessed Evagrius, [who] comparing the sight of the understanding with

The כַּנְיָא אֲבָיָא (Land, Anecdota, tom. ii. p. 196, l. 22; p. 196, l. 16;) may be compared to the ἑβδομαδάριοι who had certain duties which lasted a week assigned to them in monasteries. the Cherubim spake, saying, "He that hath many eyes, perceiveth spiritually much, and is enlightened on all sides, [p. 236] and abideth without shadow."

Now on the day before the commemoration of the holy Mâr Jacob, in which all the brethren were accustomed to bake bread in the refectory, and to celebrate this night with psalms and spiritual praises, when they came [to the verse] "I will sing of the goodness of the Lord for ever, and His belief¹ shall be in my mouth from generation to generation,"² the mind of the holy man was carried away as though by some spiritual vision. And it appeared to him in the spirit as though he were not in the refectory, but in this holy temple,³ and he saw that of the monks, old and young, who were there with him, two and forty persons were chosen, and in his hearing the words, "The Grace of the Lord," which are usually sung⁴ on the Festivals of the Lord, were changed⁵ into those which are sung to a

when the service of the refectory¹ was over, and each man had gone to his cell, at mid-day, according to custom, the brethren went in to the refectory,² and that holy old man was at their head like the moon surrounded by stars. And he answered and said to them, "Did ye then, beloved, see me last night while these things happened to me?" They said to him, "Yes, master, we have seen that two visitations happened to thee, but what these visitations which happened to thee [portended] we know not; and now we ask thee to shew us." And again he answered and said to them, "In the first vision I saw that two and forty men belonging to this congregation here present, old men, middle-aged,³ and young men, were set apart [to be] governors of the Holy Church; some of them Patriarchs, some of them Metropolitans, and some of them Bishops. And also in the second vision it was shewn to me that from the glorious position in which this monastery now standeth, flourishing with teachers, and expositors, and sages, and wise and understanding men, it shall be brought low, and abased, and humbled in everything in which it excelleth, more particularly in respect of

OF THE COMING IN OF 'AMRAN BAR-MUHAMMAD¹ TO THIS COUNTRY [OF MARGÂ], AND OF HOW HAVING SEIZED MANY ESTATES AND SLAIN THEIR OWNERS, HE WISHED ALSO TO KILL THE HOLY MAN [CYRIACUS] AND TO INHERIT THIS MONASTERY.

And there was a certain troublesome Ishmaelite whose name was 'Amran bar-Muhammad, concerning whom I have also written in the history of Rabban Gabriel,² and he was a harsh, violent, and pitiless man, and a murderer. Now upon [his] coming into this country from Bêth Bôzâi,³ he began to slay its inhabitants, and to take possession of the province of Bîrtâ, and of Hêlaphtâ, and Hêtrâ, and Bâshôsh, and Hêrpâ, villages of Saphsâphâ,⁴ and little by little of many others. And he determined to take possession of the estates of this holy monastery, [and he would have done so] if this holy father [Mâr Cyriacus] had not stood in our breaches and fenced up our paths against his harmful acts, as did the blessed Moses,⁵ and Joshua and David in their times. [p. 240] And when he made his coming to this monastery and would have compelled all the brethren to sign a deed selling the monastery and its estates to him, the blessed old man stood up valiantly before him, and reproached him, and made him despicable through the rebukes of his words, and by the abundance of his demonstrations, saying, "I affirm and I swear¹ by the hope of the Christians, O 'Amran bar-Muḥammad, that this monastery shall never belong to thee, nor to thy sons, nor to thy grandsons. Behold all the land is before thee, get thee away from this holy house, for as the Lord liveth, if thou departest [from it], it will be much the better for thee, and thou wilt do great good unto thyself; but if thou darest to seek to enter the monastery by the might of thy threats, thou shalt very soon eat the bitterness of the reward of thy evil deeds. Behold I have warned thee, and behold I have advised thee for good; get thee forth from our monastery and it shall be well with thee, lest thou go quickly to the house of the dead. And know this also: because of all the blood of the believers which thou hast poured out, and the wretched people whom thou hast slain and whose houses thou hast seized, it is written with an iron style on a *shâmîr*² stone in the record chamber of the justice of God. And this shall be to thee the sign; when thou diest, the earth from which thou wast taken and to which thou shouldst return shall not receive thee, but thy body shall be cast forth, and the Evil One will not accept thy body." Now when by all this might of trust in divine providence, and by the fervidness of his temperament, and by the sharpness of his tongue he had put Amran to shame, 'Amran rose up wrathfully and went to Hĕlaphtâ having the evil [intention] [p. 241] in his heart to send secretly and slay the holy man. And when 'Amran had gone, and [the blessed man] saw that the monks were terrified and afraid of his threats, he said to them, "Fear not, O blessed brethren, his words, nor any stumbling-block which he can put in our way, for this monastery shall be for ever and ever preserved from this man and from all his posterity; let no man be afraid that 'Amran will send here to slay any one, for, on the contrary, he hath made up his mind to flatter you. And behold he will shortly send for some of you, therefore go with him readily and be not afraid, for I will go forth with you, and I will pour into his ears things mightier than those which ye have [already] heard."

Now when a few days had passed by 'Amran sent ten horsemen for certain of the old men¹ of the congregation. And when they beat the board² for assembling the monks and they were all gathered together, all the brethren were afflicted through fear, because [the horsemen] would not allow the holy old man to go with the [other] old men his companions, saying, "We are not commanded to bring Rabban Cyriacus with us." Now when [the holy man] saw that the brethren were in despair and undone, he drew them aside, and said to them, "Be not afraid to go, for when ye shall enter into the presence of 'Amran ye shall find me sitting before him on his seat"; and relying upon his hope they quickened¹ their steps, and set out immediately, the horsemen leaving that blessed man in the porch before the temple. Now until they (i. e., the horsemen) had passed the village of Rîshâ he and the brethren remained in the place of the after-supper service, but when every man had returned to his cell, that same Divine power which carried the Prophet Habakkuk to Babylon,² and by which the ship of the disciples came suddenly to the land whither they were going,³ and which lifted up the blessed Paul to heaven⁴ and to Paradise, [p. 242] worked on behalf of this poor monastery at that time when there was no king, and when this Arab was wishing to compel those blessed men to transfer to him the monastery and its estates. And, by the might of the Holy Spirit, it took him like his companion [Paul] and made him come into the presence of 'Amran before those old men and the horsemen who were with them had come in; and it hid him from his sight, as he stood above his head⁵ until they had knocked at the door, and suddenly he revealed himself and appeared among them. And when 'Amran saw him, he looked in savage anger upon those whom he had sent and upon the old men, saying, "Since I commanded that Cyriacus should not come why have ye brought him with you?" And they all swore [saying], "We have not seen him since we left him in the monastery, except at this present." The blessed man said to him, "I am come hither to thee before thou couldst look in the mirror and comb thy head and beard;¹ be not angry with these venerable men, for thou shalt never inherit our monastery. Cease from this [thy] wish and let thy hard heart be softened, and let thy avarice be satisfied, for behold, thou hast inherited much; and by these things hast thou made thyself such that no one of thy contemporaries will go before thee into hell." And 'Amran, while wondering and marvelling at the words of the old man, recognised that all this boldness of speech which his words had acquired, was of no ordinary origin, and also that his swift coming and his entrance into his presence, which had had no need of the opening of a door, and his being hidden from his view until the entrance of his companions also testified to this, and he feared and trembled before him, and he answered and said to them, "Rise up and go in peace to your monastery, for I have no dispute with you;" so the blessed men went forth and came to their cells.

OF HOW 'AMRAN AFTERWARDS SENT FIVE ARABS TO LIE IN WAIT ROUND ABOUT THE CELL OF RABBAN CYRIACUS AND TO KILL HIM AND TO BRING HIS HEAD TO HIM.

Then the Calumniator, the wicked enemy of the Christians, and especially of holy men,² gave 'Amran counsel, and he hardened his heart, and he attributed that which had been done to sorcery, and he judged that Cyriacus had performed that piece of work which power which the blessed Elisha possessed, by which there appeared to the young man his servant spiritual hosts, with their chariots and horses of fire, surrounding all the place where Elisha¹ was, according to the custom of the might of His power, which strengtheneth all things, [p. 244] likewise surrounded with fire the whole place where this holy old man sang the after-supper service, and those [men] saw the fire and marvelled. And it appeared to them, moreover, that not only fire which could not be approached surrounded him and shot out flames, but also that the whole of his body was like light, and that every [time] that he bowed himself to the earth and stood up [again], and spread out his fingers to heaven, there went forth from them ten lamps of light which were ascending unto heaven. And after these things they saw another like unto him² standing at his right hand, and those men were stupefied and terror-stricken, and they thought with anxiety that the fire would suddenly come forth from him and consume them. And when they wished to depart their bellies clave³ to the ground upon which they were lying until it dawned; and when they had been perceived by certain of the brethren, they went forth to them, and asked them what was the cause of their [being there], and the men revealed to them truthfully what the reason was. Now the old man Hĕnân-Îshô^c, the neighbour of Cyriacus swore, saying, "I was one of those brethren who went to the men." And when the men had gone to him that sent them, and had repeated to him all [these] things, he desisted from all the evil which he was ready to do to us, and at the end of his life he commanded his sons, saying, "The monastery of Bêth 'Âbhê can never be yours."¹ And when 'Amran died the earth would not receive him, but three times was he buried, and three times was he cast forth from it, according to the word spoken concerning him beforehand by the blessed Cyriacus.

OF ANOTHER REVELATION WHICH [MÂR CYRIACUS] RECEIVED, AND OF HOW HE NEEDS MUST BE NAMED AND ACCOUNTED BISHOP FOR A LITTLE WHILE, AND THEN DEPART FROM [THIS] WORLD.

Now when the holy man our holy father Mâr Cyriacus had laboured in all kinds of asceticism, the mother of all uprightness, in voluntary poverty, and abstinence, and fasting, and prayer, and philosophic reading in the cell, and holy meditation upon the Scriptures, and contemplation² [which] pierceth into things of the future, and the acquiring of things which endure, and watching which purifieth the thoughts, and bendings in double, and stretchings out at full length in making bowings of adoration, and prostrations which make the sweat to flow, like a watchful guardian he kept a strict watch on all sides that for no reason whatever a single duty of the ascetic life should be neglected on his part or on that of his fellow-monks, and he was like unto a wall to this godly flock. And when he was waiting and wishing that the ship of the treasures of his riches had already drawn nigh unto rest, an angel spake with him, face to face [saying], "Thou shalt be a Bishop, and then thou shalt rest from thy troubles. According to the number of the fifty years in which thou hast led an ascetic life in this monastery, for fifty days shalt thou be called Bishop; and then thou shalt by a peaceful death rest in peace. Behold I am with thee in all thy labours; let thy old age then be strong, and thy time of life¹ be renewed, and a month of days hence believing men, from the city of Bâlâdh, over whom the Spirit hath appointed thee governor, shall come for thee; go with them disputing nothing, for the matter is from the Lord, Who ordereth all thy [acts] as His will pleaseth, [p. 246] He hath helped thee that thou shouldst be saved." And when the angel had disappeared from before him, he took a reed and wrote upon the wall of his cell concerning this vision which had appeared to him, and the brethren found this writing after his departure and read it. And the old man Rabban Elisha, may his memory be blessed! used to say, "I also read these lines when I was serving in the monastery, for his handwriting was still preserved in that cell."

OF THE COMING OF THE PEOPLE OF BÂLÂDH TO THIS MONASTERY FOR THE BLESSED MAN [MÂR CYRIACUS], AND OF HOW THEY HAD WITH THEM A LETTER OF THE PIOUS MÂR TIMOTHY PROHIBITING HIM TO REMAIN IN THE MONASTERY AFTER HE HAD BEEN CALLED.

Now therefore, when the report, which was filled with the glory of Christ, of the wonderful deeds which He was working through the son of His house, Mâr Cyriacus, in this monastery, had flown like a bird with swift pinions, and had been carried to every quarter of the world, and to all peoples, and his glorious deeds were being repeated in the streets and among the assemblies for the glorifying of the Holy Church, the Bishop of the city of Bâlâdh, who had arranged these holy matters, departed this temporary life. And because of the glorious things of Rabban Cyriacus, which were in the mouths of all men, the people of Bâlâdh sent letters to the holy Mâr Timothy, praying and entreating him, saying, "We have elected that thou shouldst set over us as head, and shepherd, and guardian, and governor, Rabban Cyriacus the ascetic, the head of the monastery of Bêth 'Âbhê," (now this took place, in very truth), and they took the letter and came for him here. [p. 247] Now a very old monk whose name was Bar-Hĕnânâ told me that the people of Bâlâdh made the expedition to us for the sake of Mâr Cyriacus, with horses of long pedigree, and baggage horses,¹ and mules for burdens, together

And when they had gone in before the temple,³ and had made known the cause of their coming, they were received by the community with great honour. And when they gave Mār Cyriacus the letter which commanded him to go down to the Catholicus, his eyes overflowed with tears, and weeping he lifted up his face to God like aged Simeon, and said, "Lord, dismiss Thy servant,⁴ according to Thy word, in peace; for behold, mine eyes have seen, and my lips have proclaimed Thy great mercy, in that Thou hast set the limit to the close of my life and to the end of my years." And he answered and said to the believing men who came after him, "Beloved, ye have wearied yourselves for nothing, and your expectation is in vain; ye cannot rejoice at my being appointed to be your head, neither can I rejoice at the glory of rearing you, for I shall [only] live fifty days in your city, and it sufficeth. It is a mere bundle of bones which shall be brought in to dwell in your city; may its protection and generation be prolonged among all the generations of the world! OF THE WONDERFUL DEED WHICH THE BLESSED MĀR
CYRIACUS WROUGHT IN THE CITY OF BĀLĀDH, AND OF THE END OF HIS LIFE.

Now since I have been in the habit of making enquiries concerning every thing which relates to this blessed man with great eagerness and desire, for stories about him are sweet and pleasant to me, one year when I went on certain business which called me to the city of Bâlâdh, I asked about his holy grave, and I was blessed by it. And I went out to the porch¹ before the great temple of the church, and I found there a very old priest, whose name was Nekhwâr,² and with whom I was acquainted when I was the secretary of the holy Mâr Abraham [p. 249] the Catholicus in the royal city,³ and I asked that old man to relate to me any miracles or mighty deeds which the blessed Mâr Cyriacus had wrought. And having told me of the many cures [which he had made] and of the devils which he had driven out from multitudes of men, he also told me the following:—"In the days of Mâr Cyriacus there was in this City a Bishop of the followers of Severus [of Antioch],¹ and much friendship existed between him and our Bishop Cyriacus; and after the death of Mâr Cyriacus that Bishop related to me as follows:—“One day I had risen up early in the morning, and I had come from my cell to this your church to go in and to enjoy myself with the sight and conversation of the holy man your Bishop Cyriacus. And while I was speaking in the porch² and was not yet inside the church, behold the blessed man himself came down, and when he saw me he answered and said to me, Why art thou standing here, master? And I said to him, I have come to see thee, and to be blessed by thy holiness. He said to me, Blessed be thy coming! If thou hadst come to me before I came out, I would have gone nowhere; but since we two have met outside, come with me, and let us go together to pray in the Monastery of Rabban Pîthiôn;³ and,” he continued, “he took hold of my right hand with his left, and thus he and I singing a psalm went outside the city, and entered into that monastery. And when we had prayed, and he was still holding me by my hand, the two of us went down to the Tigris, and he answered joyfully, and said to me, Come now, let us cross over and pray in the Monastery of the holy Rabban Joseph,⁴ because his shrine is very dear to me and because he is from my own monastery¹ [p. 250], and because I have not yet seen his monastery. I said to him, If thou hadst this intention in thy mind why did we not cross over at the ferry instead of troubling ourselves to come down to this [place]? And he looked at me smiling, and said, Hast thou any doubt that, by the power of God, we can cross over on a wooden boat only? Now shalt thou see the power of Christ our Lord. And he made the sign of the Cross upon the face of the water, and another upon his own face, and another upon mine, and we turned to cross over. And while I was afraid lest peradventure the waters would let us drop through them, I perceived that they were becoming solid under my feet² as if they were ice-bound, and thus we crossed over the Tigris and went into that monastery. And when we had come forth from there and he had dismissed the brethren who had come forth in honour of us, and they had returned to their cells, we remained for a little time on the bank of the river; now he did this that the monks might go away to a distance and not be able to see him. And again he answered and said to me, Let us cross over the river [to the place] exactly opposite to us,³ and let us go and pray in the monas-

And he made the sign of the Cross upon the waters in front of us, and holding me by the hand he led me over the river, and we went into the monastery and prayed, and we went forth from there and came to the cell of the holy man. And Rabban George, the head of our monastery⁴ told me, saying, "One year I went into the city of Mōṣul about the taxes, and I went to the house of this believing man 'Uthmân bar-Khusrau, that I might obtain some assistance from him by his speaking for me a good word to the government, [p. 251] and I found him reading in the book Huppâkh Hushshâbhê,⁵ of our holy Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh of Adiabene. And when I had sat down he said to me, 'I love your monastery of Bêth 'Âbhê for two reasons; firstly, because of this teacher Îshô^c-yahbh the Catholicus, who is in very truth⁶ a great teacher and debater, and [who] standeth firmly in the strength of his demonstrations against the confession of the duality of the Natures in one Person, which those who follow the Council of Chalcedon wickedly declare, and I meditate upon his composition continually; and secondly, because of this story which

O our brother [ĊAbhd-ÎshôĊ], let also this discourse, which is the fifth of the books of this our history, be received upon the table of the hearing of thy understanding, for by the glorious entreaty of thy electness my feeble tongue hath run, and will further run, upon the excellent matters of the histories of holy men, those athletes of might and warriors of strength, who did battle with the body and the passions thereof and with rebellious devils, and who bound on the crown of victory and overcame, and were crowned in the spiritual contest of their lives which pleased God. And we will place at the beginning of all those histories which our speech is about to unfold the account of the victorious deeds of the ascetic priest, and victorious martyr, the blessed Rabban Mâr ShûbhĤâl-ÎshôĊ, the Metropolitan Bishop; and to it we will add that of the pious and holy men who followed in his footsteps throughout the land in which he taught, Mâr Yahbh-lâhâ and Kârdagh his brother, as well as that of the blessed Bishop Mâr Elijah, the men who were ordained by the pious Mâr Timothy, the Catholicus and Patriarch, for the countries of the barbarians who were remote from all understanding and a decent manner of life, and to whose part of the world no¹ preacher and planter of the truth had ever gone, and where the doctrine of the glad tidings of our Redeemer had never been proclaimed. [p. 253] But why should I speak of the [knowledge] of Christ our Lord [only]? for they had not even received the knowledge of God, the Creator of the worlds and their Governor, like the Jews and other nations, but they offered, and behold they [still] offer, worship to trees, graven images of wood,² four-footed beasts, fishes, reptiles, birds of prey, and [other] birds, and such like things, and they bow down to worship fire and the stars and planets. [Mâr Yahbh Allâhâ, and K̄ardagh and Mâr Elijah were] the men who preached the doctrine of Christ in those countries of Dailômâyê and of Gîlâyê,³ and of the other barbarians who live beyond them, and they planted in them the light of the truth of the glad tidings of our Lord, and plucked out from the simple souls that were there all the abominable thorns and tares of evil deeds which Satan had sown in their hearts. And they taught and baptized, and wrought mighty deeds, and shewed forth wonderful works, and the fame of their acts was carried to all the ends of the East. And thou mayest learn clearly concerning all these things from the letter which certain merchants and king's scribes, who were going in and coming out

OF THE ORIGIN OF THE BLESSED SHÛBHĪ ÂL-ÎSHÔ^c AND OF HIS COMING TO THIS MONASTERY.

The family of the blessed Shûbhġâl-Îshô^c was descended from the race of the children of Ishmael, and his city was Hġertâ-dhġ-Na^cmân,¹ [p. 254] but his parents departed from there, and took up their habitation in Hġesnâ Ebhrâÿâ,² and according to what I have learned, the blessed man was born and brought up in that city. And when he had become a young man, having, by the exceeding care of his parents, been trained in the Holy Scriptures and instructed in the literature of the Arabic [language], which was their own tongue, his parents departed this temporary life, and he and one sister, who was younger than he, were left behind. Now their parents had left them much riches, and this he divided between the two of them, and to his sister he left the estate and everything that was in the house, and he took his portion and came to this monastery. And having served in the monastery and performed the exercises of the monks in a perfect manner according to the command of the fathers, he persuaded those which were in current use everywhere among the merchants, now this he endured cheerfully, but finally they began to make him hear cruel words, saying, "Let our corn lands alone, and depart." And having sown much seed in the past year, and the harvest being near, certain sinful men and evil livers, when no one perceived, devised an artful plot to slay that holy man, having forgotten all the good deeds which he had done unto them; and [the words], "They rewarded me evil for good, and hatred instead of love,"¹ and again, "The eater of my bread upon whom I trusted greatly, hath acted craftily against me,"² were fulfilled in very deed in the matter of that holy man. But since our Lord God willed that those evil men should not be partakers in that innocent blood, His graciousness did not in any wise allow that man to be alienated from His household. And moreover, he that feareth the Lord, even though it be but a little, and would dare to commit some evil act, the holy angel which cleaveth to him alloweth not that evil act to be wrought successfully as he would wish, but he extinguisheth and hindereth and confoundeth the manner of his work, even as he wrought in the case of that blessed man who saw in the country [of Egypt] the daughter of a priest of idols, and by the agency of the Evil One he lusted after her. [p. 256] And when he asked her from her father, he promised to give him to her, but after he had denied God, and the garb with which he was clothed, and baptism, the holy angel which clave to him compelled the Satan who dwelt in the idol, and he returned answer to the priest, saying, "Thou shalt not give him thy daughter, for God is with him, and He aideth him.”¹ Now therefore in this manner did that merciful Lord act, Who beareth with all our obstinacy, Who endureth our wickednesses, and Who doeth good unto us, until in the righteous judgment which is to come He will reward us according to our deeds with a measure pressed down² and running over.

Now Rabban Íshô'-yahbh the Long, from whom I have received much material for these histories, told me, saying:—“When I was serving in the monastery, I was sent secretly by the monks who held the affairs of the community in their hands, saying, 'Go to Rabban Shûbhĥâl-Îshô^c at Bêth Habbâ, and inform him, saying, If thou dost not save thyself by flight this night thou wilt certainly be slain by the assiduity of such and such persons, who have taken themselves out of everything which is seemly for the sake of thy destruction.' And that truthful old man swore to me, saying, "When I had told him those things, he began to weep bitterly; and he answered and said, 'Am I worthy of the reward of being a participator in the sufferings of Christ? This day hath it been pointed out to me that the labours of my loving-kindness have reached unto heaven before God for an everlasting memorial. I entered Bêth 'Âbhê with earthly riches, and I have spent them at the word of the mouth of Christ, according to His command, and this day I shall go forth from it without even a wallet.'" And Îshô^c-yahbh the old man said, "When I saw that I was obliged to make him set out on the road to flee to the city¹ without bread, and without a wallet, inasmuch as he had nothing with him except his tunic and his cloak, I gave him my own wallet, and I put inside it three loaves²

CHAPTER III.

OF THE PUNISHMENT WHICH THIS MONASTERY JUSTLY RECEIVED FOR THE PERSECUTION OF THE HOLY SHÛBHĀL-ĪSHŌ.

If now earthly judges should do unto those who work wickedness according to what the sword of justice which they hold demandeth, and should award good things to good men, this would be according to the testimony of the scribe of the Spirit, the blessed Paul, [who saith] “How just then and righteous is our good God! for He chastiseth and punisheth, and judgeth, and correcteth in such wise that we may not become altogether without perception [of sin], having trodden down conscience and cast out from our minds the [retribution of] justice which is to come”.

Now when [those men] thought that behold they had slain the righteous man, and they would inherit his labour, and were making ready to go out and reap the fields which they had not sown, and to gather in that which they had not scattered, the Lord brought up against them only, a huge cloud of locusts, which devoured all the crops of Bêth Ḥabbâ, and which did not leave them a remnant; and year after year God sent this punishment upon them because it was as if the innocent blood of that innocent man had been shed by them by murder. And if God would judge a man for his readiness of intention, and would take vengeance upon him for what he wished to do, and would punish him according to His word, “He that looketh upon a woman to desire her, [p. 258] hath straightway committed adultery with her in his heart, and is already accounted an adulterer”¹—although [as in the case of the blessed man who lusted for the daughter of the priest], it is natural that the man who had subjected himself to that which was unnatural should be moved with desire² for the beauty of a woman—[how much more would He do so in this case]? And although murder is an abominable thing, and ten thousand evil punishments are reserved for those who commit it, yet those men were prepared to slay him if an opportunity for doing so had come into their hands, and they were therefore strictly speaking murderers and men guilty of the blood of that holy man.

Now when, according to their custom, the monks of this monastery were going down to the blessed Timothy the Catholicus that he might give them help—for he loved this monastery greatly, and honoured it with many gifts, because it was here pointed out to him that he should become Catholicus—he asked how they and their crops did. And they made answer to him, saying, “They are going on poorly and badly, for behold, for some years [past] the locusts have eaten up our crops in particular [and those of no one else]”. The blessed man said to them, “My sons, the locusts which devour the fields, and those which eat up the hidden fruits of your souls, shall not be scraped away from you, because ye were the cause of the persecution and driving away of the holy Mār Shūbhḥâl-Îshô^c from among you. For our Lord and His holy angels have testified to me [concerning] these things which I have learned from old monks in this monastery, and which I have not imagined out of my own mind, but have judged according to that which is said by the holy man, 'If an act of sin which happeneth accidentally is deserving of seventy and sevenfold¹ punishment, how many times seventy and seven shall an act of wilful sin be punished?'" [p. 259] Assume [if ye will] that for a man to look upon a woman is an act of accidental sin, but the going out of those wretched men to commit murder is certainly an act of wilful sin; even so are these things.

CHAPTER IV.

OF THE LAYING ON OF HANDS WHICH THE BLESSED MĀR SHŪBHḤĀL-ÎSHÔ^c RECEIVED TO BE THE METROPOLITAN OF GÎLÂN AND DAILÔM.²

If now according to the goodness of his master, and according as he is able, a servant shall endeavour to measure the steps of his course of life along the smooth paths of his commandments, and shall arrange every thing concerning himself for the good will and pleasure of his master, he will be glorified with the glory of his master, and will be made ruler over all his treasures, for the treasure shall be added unto and increased by his industrious trafficking, like the man who received five talents and made them ten, and him that

[received] two and made them into four, and both heard [the words], "Well done, good and faithful servants, ye have been faithful in little, and much shall be entrusted into your hands"¹. According to the might of every man it is required of him: from him that hath received much that he should labour much [is required], and from him unto whom little hath been given little [is required]; every man according to his might, saith our Lord, to Whom be glory. And a certain holy man testifieth [to this], saying, "One man converteth a mighty people, and another a small district, and another hath acquired his own soul only; yet in excellence [all three] are equal."

Now in respect of this man of whom we speak, inasmuch as he was exceedingly able, very much was entrusted into his hand. [p. 260] And when he went down to the holy Mâr Timothy, who having learned concerning all his affairs, and seen that he was instructed in the Syriac language and learning, and also in the Arabic and Persian tongues,² determined to anoint him with holy oil, and to make him hold the pastoral staff, and to send him as a shepherd and teacher to the barbarian nations who had never received the bridle of the teaching concerning God, and into whose country none of the preachers and evangelists of the kingdom of heaven had gone since the time of the Apostles until the present. And when he advised him to undertake this thing, relying upon the Lord and upon the Divine help which would cleave to him and which would convert those erring nations by his hand, inasmuch as this work to which he was called was from the Lord, he undertook [it] with fear and joy. And the day of the consecration of the blessed man was celebrated with the great ceremony which belongeth to a festival full of all joyous things, and all the chief men, among the believers who heard that he had undertaken the conversion of those countries, provided him with much money, and with the necessary clothing, and together with the Divine power and the venerable disciples who accompanied him, he set out for those countries. Now Mâr Abraham, the Catholicus, a holy man in very truth, related to me fully concerning all this matter [of Mâr Shûbhâhâl-Îshô^c], and he told me that he made his entrance there with exceeding great splendour, for barbarian nations need to see a little worldly pomp and show to attract them and to make them draw nigh willingly to Christianity.

[p. 261] And when he had entered those countries he began to teach and to shew them the true knowledge of his doctrine, and while he was teaching with these words, Christ our Lord was confirming them by the miracles which he worked, by cleansing the lepers, by healing the sick, by opening the eyes of the blind, by making the lame to walk, by raising the dead, and by making barren women fruitful, for the Divine dispensation is accustomed to shew forth mighty works at the beginning of Divine operations, more particularly in the case of those barbarians who from their earliest times and throughout all their generations had been led captive by evil devils to the worship and service of their corrupt things. And by the sight of the miracles which our Lord worked by the hands of the blessed man; he taught many cities and thickly peopled districts,¹ and baptized [their inhabitants], and brought them near to the doctrine of Divine life. And he built churches, and established priests and deacons in them, and he set apart some of the brethren who were with him to teach them psalms and spiritual praises, and he himself went further and further into the country, until [he arrived at] the ends of the East in the great teaching which he made among the heathen, and Marcionites,² and Manichees,³ [against] every object

² مَرْقِيُونٌ. The heretic Marcion lived in the second century of our era. He held that there were four unbegotten existences, and that an irreconcilable opposition existed between the Creator and the Christian God. He condemned marriage, he fasted on the Sabbath, he rejected much of the Old Testament, and only accepted the Gospel of St. Luke, which he mutilated. For the history of the man, his views, his blasphemies and his sect, see Tillemont, Mémoires, t. ii. pp. 122—130. Ephraim, Zenobius and Paul, disciples of Saint Ephraem, Bôd, the Perio-dentes, Daniel of Ras 'Ain, and others wrote treatises against the heresy of Marcion. See B. O., iii. 1. pp. 43, 63, 170, 219 and 223.

³ Mani or Manes, the founder of the sect of the Manichees, sprang from a family of the Magians, but embraced Christianity about the middle of the third century of our era. According to Eusebius (Hist. Eccles., vii. 31) he first proclaimed himself to be Christ, and afterwards to be the very Paraclete and the Holy Spirit. He selected twelve disciples and sent them out into the world to preach his doctrine. For a history of the sect and its title see Tillemont, Mémoires, t. iv. pp. 152—171. Akin to the Manichees in belief was the famous (or infamous) Bâbaki sect البَابَكِيَّة led by Bâbak al-Hurramî بابك الخرمي. He is first mentioned A. H. 201 (see Ibn al-Athîr, ed. Torn-berg, tom. vi. p. 231, l. 7), and he was slain A. H. 223 (see Tabarî, ed. de Goeje, ser. iii. tom. ii. p. 1015, l. 10). The and at a terrible spot on that road they surrounded him, and crowned him with swords. Thus the blessed man departed from [this] laborious life, flowing with the blood of the reproach and disgrace of the Cross, to the greatly desired chambers of Paradise. And certain Christians who had become his disciples, when they had learned [these things], went out to search for him and took his holy body, and according to their power and knowledge, they buried him hastily in a church, and mourned for him greatly; and they gathered together from the men who had murdered him the things which had been made for him, veils,¹ curtains,² and stoles³ in which the priest administers the sacrament, which they had taken from him, and sent them to Mâr Timothy, and some of them were handed on to this monastery. CHAPTER VI.

OF MÂR YABHLÂHÂ, AND OF MÂR ẖARDAGH HIS BROTHER.

From the whole 'circle of the Holy Scriptures we may learn that the piety of the acts of [men's] lives which are wrought secretly, and of all the good qualities¹ of the soul which are perfected spiritually in the hidden man, is not by any means hidden [on the contrary, for] God, for the gratification of Whose will [these things] have been wrought by righteous and holy men, [p. 264] maketh [them] manifest straightway; and [this we know] especially from the living mouth of our Redeemer, [Who] saith, "When thou prayest, enter into thy chamber and shut thy door, and pray to thy Father Who is in secret, and thy Father Who seeth in secret will reward thee openly."² And He will increase and make to rejoice those of His household³ in this world, and He will shew that they are His glorious [subjects] and men united in concord⁴ by the signs and powers of healing which are wrought by them and by their hands in every kind of way, and will reward them in the kingdom of heaven by making them to live before His face with everlasting happiness. And this was what was wrought upon that holy union in blessed brotherhood of body and of spirit, Rabban Yahbhlâhâ and Abbâ Ẓardagh his brother, the Metropolitans of the countries which have before been mentioned in writing.¹ Now these two blessed men [came] from Rêsh Ainâ,² a village of Saphsâphâ, in this country of Margâ, and both became disciples together in this holy monastery. And they excelled in chastity and in all the various kinds of observances which the sublime monastic life demandeth, the keeping of the tongue and of the passions, the evening fast, the watching all night, the prayer for collecting the thoughts, and the [keeping] pure the dwelling-place³ of Godhead, even according to the words of the blessed Mark the monk who in these three virtues included the whole ascetic life, namely, "Let a man cleanse his thoughts, let him pray without ceasing, and let him endure those things which shall come [upon him];" with these three virtues were these brethren adorned. Now the old man Ẓardagh was younger than his brother, and he was a beautiful writer; and Yabhlâhâ was a book-binder, like the blessed Mâr Aḥâ and his brother.⁴ And they were praised by the tongues of all men, [p. 265] according to what the holy Mâr Abraham told me, saying, "In the beginning when I came [here] to be a solitary, I worked in the monastery for the whole of the specified space of three years,⁵ and I did not know if K̄ardagh had ever lifted his eyes or opened them to look upon me; and I thought, concerning him," he was saying to me, "perhaps he is blind. The labours and humility¹ of Rabban Yahbh Allâhâ were," he was saying to me, "more excellent than [those of] his brother, but in each one of them there was some one thing in which the one was superior to the other."

Now inasmuch as the holy Mâr Shûbhḥâl-Îshô^c had finished the course of his testimony, it was necessary that another man should be chosen to succeed him, to go and rear the flocks which had been brought into the fold of life by the care of that holy man. And when Mâr Timothy, of pious memory, had urged this [service] upon every man who was able to do this, and there was no one who would undertake the work for God's sake like unto that man, the blessed Mâr Catholicus was obliged to send to this monastery for these two blessed brethren, that he might consecrate them bishops, and send them to those countries.

CHAPTER VII.

OF THE CHOICE OF THE HOLY MEN TO BE SENT TO THOSE COUNTRIES (I. E., GÎLÂN AND DAILÔM).

We must learn and recount that many shepherds have been chosen for all parts of the world from this holy monastery, who, through their splendid triumphs, have appeared in their generations like unto lamps set upon the candlestick the of Church, [and we must also learn and recount that this monastery] hath been named by the ancients the “house of the priesthood,” and the “father of the pillars of the holy Church” by reason of the men who have in all generations gone forth [from it], and who have become shepherds set over the flocks of Christ. [p. 266] And they did not only accept established and princely¹ thrones, which were [situated] in flourishing towns and civilized countries, but also [those of] the countries which were destitute of all knowledge of Divine things and holy doctrine, and which abounded in sorcery and idolatry and all corrupt and abominable practices, that they might uproot the evil and sow the good, and drive out the darkness of error and make to shine upon them the glorious light of their doctrine, and cast forth the devils [who were] teachers of all uncleanness. And that this was so we may learn from the blessed Mār Shūbhḥâl-Îshô^c, and from these blessed men² who succeeded him, and who because of their labour in other matters of the ascetic life, did not wish to depart. And [Mār Timothy] wrote³ here⁴ that the blessed Yahbhlâhâ⁵ and Ɣardagh should go down to him, saying that it was meet for them to preserve and rear the [fruits of the] teaching of Mār Shūbhḥâl-Îshô^c, like a goodly inheritance handed on from one brother to another, according to what is said, “If the brother of a man die and leave a widow without children, let his brother take his wife and raise up seed to him;”⁶ in this latter case according to the body, and in the former according to the spirit. So the two went down according to the rule of the Church, and [Mâr Timothy] anointed them both Metropolitans, Kârdagh of Gîlân and Yahbhlâhâ of the people of Dailôm. And when they came up to this monastery to put their affairs in order, there went with them according to what I have learned, fifteen monks [who were] holy and enlightened men, that they also might be companions with them in the spiritual labour of the Gospel of Christ, [p. 267] and among those men were those who were appointed to be Bishops of the countries beyond Gîlân and Dailôm.¹ For I have read the letter of Mâr Timothy the Catholicus to Mâr Yahbhlâhâ and the letter which was sent by him in answer to the Catholicus, saying, "Through thy prayers, O our father, by the grace of Christ, many nations have been converted to the belief of the truth, and we want to appoint Bishops over them from among the ascetics who have come with us." And Mâr Catholicus wrote to them this, "Inasmuch as the ordination of a Bishop doth not absolutely require [the presence of] three persons, and ye in your country are free from this [regulation], ye have permission [to do so] by the power of the word of our Lord, in which every thing standeth and is directed. Appoint as Bishops whomsoever ye and the pious Kârdagh shall choose, and in the place of the third [person who should be present], let the Book of the Gospels be laid on the [episcopal] throne on the right hand; thus by the hand of God perform the ordination of the first Bishop, and let others be those where his brother was, never came back here. But now if thou wishest to learn in part¹ concerning the wonderful deeds which took place at their hands, consider in thy mind, that not without cause and simply through words divorced from deeds did those barbarian nations of daring thieves, and plunderers, and worshippers of devils turn from their polluted religions, which were established without the labour of fasting and prayer, and despise the customary acts of the service of hateful things, and bow their necks to the submission of the yoke of fasting and of prayer, of vigil by nights, and of abstinence from every [kind of] food on the stated fasts and holy festivals. How fitting is it to quote here the words of the holy monk Ammonius, the chosen Bishop in the Church of God, who wrote in one of his letters to his disciples, saying, "For this reason the fathers lived apart in the desert, whether it be Elijah² the Tishbite or John.³ Do not imagine that these men who were righteous among men were able to cultivate righteousness while they lived among men, [p. 269] for they first of all dwelt in great solitude, and thus received the power of God that it might dwell in them, and then, possessing all virtues, God sent them among men to be His stewards, and to heal the sicknesses of men. It was, then, only when all their own sicknesses had been healed,⁴ that they were sent, for it is not possible that a soul possessing any defect whatever should be sent among mankind for edification. And I, your father, also say, because I have written these things to you, that I endured a great fight in the desert and in the mountain, and then [only] did I arrive at this condition [of perfection]." Thus far according to the words of the blessed Ammonius.

Now this pair of holy men having been first of all healed [of their own sicknesses], and having gathered together treasure of the good things of heaven by tranquil solitude and by labours of asceticism in this holy monastery, were then sent forth as apostles by God to the countries of the heathen to make their souls to live. And they became like rays of light from the height of the eminence of their course of life, and the pure lamps of their doctrine were shining brightly, being set not under the bushel and measure of sluggishness, but upon a candlestick, and they lightened all the ends of the East. And like the blessed Apostles in their days, they also taught the erring nations by the piety of their daily life, and by abstinence from every [kind of] food, as the canon of the doctrine of our Lord requireth, Who when His disciples asked Him, "Why were we not able to heal him?" said distinctly, "This kind goeth not out except by fasting and by prayer."¹ reduced himself to the lowest depth of voluntary poverty, such things, which were held to be of great value by others, appeared to him superfluous; but he had a broken vessel, in which he used to put the dry crust of bread upon which he lived, and an earthenware jar into which he cast salt seasoned with wild thyme.¹ In [the court-yard of] his cell he had a well without a rope and without a bucket, and he made use of a long reed to supply the place of a rope, and on the top of this he tied a small jar, and each evening he used to take his crust of bread, and sit by the well, and draw up water and pour over it, and he ate and it was sufficient for him; but as for [other] foods or wine they never entered his cell, neither did he make use of them. CHAPTER IX.

OF THE SUBLIME KINDS OF PRAYER WITH WHICH HE ENRICHED HIS SOUL.

Among all the virtues cultivated by holy men¹ there is none greater and more excellent than the wonderful work of prayer, for prayer maketh the pure mind at one with God, and maketh the whole man a deified and spiritual being. It removeth him that giveth himself continually to it from earth, and from the anxious care which is upon it; it made the Prophets to be victorious; it sanctified the Apostles; it entered with the Martyrs into every kind of contest, and by it they conquered the threats of kings and terrible torments; it made them like asbestos² before the fire, and they became like wood and creatures without feeling under the various tortures of every [kind of] affliction; [p. 274] and it protected the recluses, and anchorites, and ascetics in desert places, which were full of every [kind of] harmful assaults of devils, and evil animals, and noxious reptiles. For when our Lord Jesus, the Cause of the redemption of our nature, walked upon earth on our behalf in the days of His dispensation,³ and was teaching, and commanding, and exhorting the keeping of all the virtues which are in His Gospel with His living mouth, He shewed forth in His own Person the effectual working of prayer, going at one time to the mountain desert [by day], and at another to a solitary wilderness to pass the night alone, so that by His immunity from the sounds and sights which confuse the understanding, and by His solitude, He might assist [His] occupation in divine things. On account of this the holy fathers the monks were more anxious about this than any other virtue, and they have taught us to do as they did, for the blessed Mark¹ the monk saith, "Being men subject to passions it is meet that we subject ourselves to prayer; he that subdueth himself with the subjection of prayer is a wise athlete, for by means of his remoteness from things which can be felt by the senses, he sheweth forth openly the strife which is hidden." And again he saith, "There is nothing so powerful to help as prayer, and there is nothing which profiteth like unto it in respect of the Will of God, for it containeth the whole doing of the commandments; the prayer which is without wandering² is a sign of the love of God to him that endureth patiently." And again the holy Evagrius saith, "We are not commanded to watch and fast at all times, but that we should pray continually³ is a law laid down for us; [p. 275] for those who would heal the part which is liable to affections and passions need the labour of the body."

And again the blessed Abbâ Macarius, on being asked by the brethren, "Which of the labours of the ascetic life hath a reward?" answered thus:—"There is nothing more sublime than the continuing in prayer. To the very end the devils will wish to abolish [prayer], for they know that their artifices¹ are made of none effect thereby." And the holy Abbâ Isaiah places endurance in prayer above all the glorious acts of the ascetic life, and thus also saith the blessed Expositor² in his book on the Mysteries,³ "Every prayer that is [made] is a teaching concerning life to every one who is careful and knoweth [how] to regard that which is fitting." And again he saith, "Let him that is solicitous for [a life of] excellence, and is careful to do those things which please God, have anxious regard unto prayer more than unto any [other] thing; for it is manifest that the man who is not careful for even one virtue, and is not anxious to do those things which please God, will also be sluggish in respect of prayer." Wherefore also the holy Rabban Mâr Elijah, to whose noble deeds we bring back our simple narrative, aiming at the mark of the holy fathers, or rather having already entered into the experience of its efficacy, and felt through it all the hidden treasures [which are] hidden in the Books of the Spirit, knew and understood that without it a man was not able to be perfect in the service of the ascetic life. And he yoked himself to it from the beginning of his going into the cell, and he joined to it bodily labours and the concentration of the mind, [p. 276] having learned from the blessed Mark the monk, that every prayer in which the body hath not laboured is accounted to be an abortion¹ and imperfect in its bodily form. And because these two fierce contentions resist the man who has yoked his mind to the concentration which is in prayer, that is to say, disturbed wandering of the mind, and vacillating perplexity, Elijah was armed mightily, for he listened to the blessed Evagrius, who said, "If thou hast overcome the wandering of the mind, the aim of all aims, thou art worthy of perfection." Now concerning the pious and holy man [Mâr Elijah], Mâr Abraham the Catholicus told me that he had made himself accustomed to live in a dark spot in his cell, and that in it he used to perform all his seasons of prayer. And to every verse of the psalm which he said he joined a "Hallelujah! Glory be to Thee, O God," in such a way that his mind was compelled to think about the verse which was coming next and that he might not be distracted in prayer. And he used to do this so that by reason of [his] too ready facility in calling the verse to mind, it might not be too easy for his mind to wander during his prayers, and to forget² the verse which should follow, and that when, at the end of every verse, the mouth followed with, "Hallelujah! Glory be to Thee, O God," his mind might be compelled to make [one] verse follow the other in proper order. And because without the concentration of the mind divine intuition doth not give itself to the understanding so that the understanding may enter into the bosom of a divine intuition and the ascetic cannot find the shadowless Galilee,¹ he made his understanding prepared for seeing [God], even as one of the saints saith, "The moon is not equal in all its periphery except at full moon," and he asked those who observe² the mind by prayer if there were any corners in their country.³ And because it hath been said by the holy fathers [p. 277], "One word near is better than a thousand afar off," he cared less about the quantity of the Psalms [which he sang] than for the doubling of the riches and concentration of the thoughts which were in his mind,⁴ and it was superfluous to him that others said the psalter of David twice in a day and night, while their minds were building up, and hiding, and judging, and condemning, and buying, and selling. Such were the advantages which this most praiseworthy man learned for himself, who although he was little cultivated in the Scriptures, and only [knew] the psalms, and responses, and the ordinary lessons for the day, yet included all⁵ the commandments in one [act, viz.,] voluntary renunciation of every thing, and the crucifixion of the mind against all [disturbing] thoughts. And when by means of great wrestling after many years he was freed from this defect of wandering [in prayer], he cleansed and purified his heart, and from this time and onward he forsook the first step of the ascetic life, and he changed his manner of life to the singing of psalms without ceasing, being silent neither day nor night. For the holy Mâr Abraham, who more than any was acquainted with every thing concerning him, told me that even when he was wearied in sleep his mouth was not silent, but was singing psalms audibly, and that whilst his soul was answering with secret hallelujahs, his mouth sang psalms as he dreamed. And as that holy soul was [engaged] in all the spiritual and external service of the Spirit, and was dwelling in that aged and ascetic body, that strife which existed between the spirit and the flesh, and the flesh and the spirit, ceased, and his two natures (lit. manhoods) were swallowed up in the desire for the happiness of the life which is to come. And in proportion as the body languished, and his labour became [p. 278] less, his soul was lifted up to heaven on the wings of the spirit, as the holy Abbâ Isaiâh wrote, saying, "The soul¹ that hath walked worthily by the might of Christ, and hath departed from [this] world, delighteth itself in these countries whither pinions incapable of sufferings have borne it."

CHAPTER X.

OF THE ELECTION OF THE HOLY MÂR ELIJAH TO BE
BISHOP OF MÔḶĀN A CITY OF THE BARBARIANS.

There is a certain city² called MôḶĀn, which is [situated] in a country to the north-east, near to the border of the peoples of Dailôm, and its inhabitants are barbarians, and they worship dumb animals. Now when the pious Mâr Timothy had anointed and sent the holy Metropolitans Mâr Yablâhâ and Ḷardagh to Gîlân and Dailôm, he wisely determined that he would appoint to the city of MôḶân also a shepherd and prosperous husbandman to cultivate the rational souls that were therein, which had been led captive by the Calumniator from days of old. And because he knew by experience, and had found out in very deed that men of might and athletes of valour had gone forth from the divine congregation of the holy Mâr Jacob, and because from these men Mâr Catholicus had appointed fitting persons to all regions and cities [of the world], and because by them wonderful acts of power and glorious cures¹ had been made manifest, he chose from this stock to send to that city also a rod of power as out of Zion,² [p. 279] that he might obtain dominion over the demons and devils which were in that wretched city, [where] the sore of destruction had spread abroad. And because he had heard about the extraordinary manner of life of the blessed Elijah, he wrote a letter to him with love and patience,³ like a wise father to a son who can be easily persuaded, [telling him] to come down to him and he would appoint him Bishop of the city of MôḶân. And the pious Elijah answered, saying, "I cannot receive consecration except in the holy temple in which I am, and

I would that this [rite] be performed upon me on the holy first day of the week of Pentecost," [wishing] in his simplicity that [he might receive the rite] on the day in which the blessed Apostles received the gifts of the Holy Spirit. And although the time which Mâr Elijah appointed [appeared] to be afar off to the quickened readiness of the Catholicus, Mâr Timothy put off the time until the day of Pentecost, and he wrote to the pious Nestorius, Metropolitan of Adiabene, who came here (i. e., to Bêth Âbhe) and ordained Mâr Elijah in this temple according to his will; and Mâr Elijah went down to Mâr Timothy who confirmed him, and sent him off with certain merchants who were going into the countries in which Môḵân was situated. And¹ the blessed Mâr Abraham the Catholicus related to me concerning him, that instead of a cross on his neck he used to hang upon his breast a complete Book of the Gospels in a small size; and he took with him a cross of brass which, when he required to sing the psalms where he passed the night, he placed on the top of the staff which was in his hand, [p. 280] and he used to drive it into the ground in front of him and pray, and in this manner he acted when he was travelling in terrible places. Now when he was going along the road with the merchants in several companies, and he was following at some distance behind that he might have an opportunity of [singing] a psalm, a certain man had a mule which he was [trying] to keep close to the other animals (now this mule had a heavy load upon his back), and when he was going up through a high, rough and rocky pass, his foot slipped off the rugged rock, and the hoof of his foot was wrenched off and put out of its place. And when the holy Mâr Elijah came up to the man and asked him the reason of his staying behind his companions, behold he wept, and cried and rent his garments, and shewed the spiritual physician the hoof of his animal which had fallen off. Now because that holy old man in the time of his old age made use of olive oil with his dry crust by reason of the cold and feebleness which had fallen upon his stomach through [eating] dry bread and salt, he had with him in his cloak a phial of oil. And he answered and said to the owner of the mule, "Weep not, my son, neither be mournful, for God will heal thy mule easily." And he said to him, "Bring me the hoof," and he took it, and poured upon it [some of] the oil for his food, and salt of wild thyme¹ which he ate, and he laid it upon the leg of the mule, and made the sign of the Cross over it, and said to the man, "Lead on quickly in the name of the Lord, that he may not remain behind his companions;" thus he bestowed healing on the animal and joy upon his master. And this was known to all that company of people which was journeying with him into that country, and they praised [p. 281] and confessed the mighty power of Christ by Whose disciples sicknesses were healed without medicines and without drugs.

CHAPTER XI.

OF THE GOING IN OF THE BLESSED MÂR ELIJAH TO THE CITY OF MÔḶÂN, AND OF HIS PREACHING IN IT, [AND OF HIS RETURN TO THIS MONASTERY, AND OF THE END OF HIS LIFE].

Now when by the hand of God his helper the holy Mâr Elijah arrived at that city of the heathen, and went into it, and saw that the name of God, the Lord of all, and confession of Him did not exist therein at all, but that all the people that were in it offered up worship to dumb trees and senseless stones, and that it was destitute even of the Arabs and Jews who confess One God, the Creator of heaven and earth, he offered up prayer ceaselessly to Christ our Lord on their behalf, that He, Who according to the custom of His graciousness and longsuffering had brought all nations to the worship of His Godhead, might by his means, as by the hand of the Apostles, give to those people a new heart and a new spirit, that they might despise the images and senseless forms which they worshipped, and be converted to the knowledge of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. And together with all these [prayers] which he made on their behalf he bore suffering in his heart, and he placed the cross which [he had] with him upon the top of the staff which was in his hand, and during the whole day he went round about in the streets and lanes¹ of the whole city, and preached to the inhabitants with a loud voice, saying, [p. 282] “O men, who have erred from the true knowledge of God, God the Lord of all hath sent me to you to turn you from the error in which ye live. Ye have served enough those things which from their nature are not gods, for without knowledge, and by the agency of daring devils, have ye offered the worship which was due to your Lord to the trees which the earth maketh to grow up for your honour.” And having gone round and about the whole day in this preaching of Life, every evening he used to go forth outside the city, and fix the cross [upon his staff], and sing the service for the night and pray until dawn; and when it was morning, and they opened the gates, and [the people] came forth, and saw that he sat openly before the cross they marvelled and were astonished. Now in those days when he came to them, according to the Divine command and the curse of Jeremiah,¹ the evening wolves gained the mastery over them, and all persons who were left outside the [city] wall were devoured mercilessly. And the people having compassion upon him said to the blessed man, “Pass the night with us inside the wall that the wolves devour thee not.” And he answered and said to them, “The God Whom I serve will protect me from the wolves;” and this [thing] became to them a great wonder. And when he had tilled, and ploughed, and thrown up [the furrows], and cast the grains of the living wheat of the doctrine of our Lord into their ears, and had covered them up and made [the ground] smooth, he did not gather from them the fruit which he expected, but at one time they mocked at him, and at another they laughed at him. [p. 283] Then the good and merciful God Who saw his labour and toil on their behalf, brought upon them the sickness which is called “Shar’ûtâ”,¹ and their bodies were smitten with ulcers and tumours. And when Mâr Elijah saw them in the depth of their infirmity and saw that they were nigh unto death, he demanded from them that [in return for] the healing of their bodies, [they should] worship his God, and they by reason of the affliction which they were suffering promised, saying, “We will do this at once, and we will become servants of that God Who is able to give us healing, and we will cast aside all our [present] objects of worship, and elect Him [in their stead].” And he blessed the oil [taken] from the phial which he had upon him, and by prayer, and the sign of the Cross, and the making mention of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, he healed them all. Now when they were healed² of this sickness by the grace of God, and they had seen³ the mighty deeds and miracles which [Mâr Elijah] worked among the sick, and the devils which he drove out of many [people], their hearts were softened to hearken unto his doctrine. And⁴ he began to speak before them concerning God, the Lord of all, and concerning the coming of our Lord Christ into the world, and they were converted by his words, and by the love of his God, and they answered him with one voice, saying, "We have Yazd, whom our grandfathers, fathers and ourselves have worshipped, and we are afraid of the injuries which he may do unto us, lest peradventure when we deny him, he may destroy our lives. If, however, thy God, in Whom thou hast made us to place our trust—for He is [God alone], and there is none other besides Him, and we also have chosen to be His servants and worshippers—is able to slay and destroy him, behold then we are before thee like matter before the handicraftsman, and it is in thy power to do with us according to thy will." [p. 284] Now the holy Mâr Abraham told me—even as if he were standing before God the Lord of all, with His holy angels as witnesses, and I set down [here] his words without alteration—that when those people had said this to the blessed man, he answered and said to them, "Where is this Yazd, the son of a whore, whom ye and your fathers have served?" And they went with him and shewed him from the top of a hill a mighty oak¹ tree, situated in a valley, which was called the "chief of the forest," and which owing to length of time and the care with which they had tended it, had grown to a great height,² and had acquired great breadth in its girth, and great density³ of foliage. And he asked for an axe, and they brought him [one], and he girded up his loins, and rolled up the sleeves of his tunic, and he took the axe like a warrior, and went down to the tree, more especially, however, against the devil which dwelt therein, and lifting up his voice in the courage of his confidence, saying, "The voice of the Lord moveth the hinds to calve, and uprooteth the trees of the forest,"¹ he lifted up his axe and brandished it against the tree. And he did it a second time, and a third time, and the tree fell, and he hewed down all its ancient strength and thickness with three strokes of the axe; and he smote and cut down also the rest of the branches which were round about it, and which those erring people called the "children of Yazd." And he lifted up his voice, and with his hand he made signs to those people to come down to him, and they did so, and they gathered together reeds, and pieces of bramble and pieces of dry wood, and laid them on the tree and upon its branches, and burnt them up, and thus the error of that devil ceased. And they all lifted up their voices and glorified God Who had made the blessed Mâr Elijah to preach to them, as did those [men] who in the days of Elijah the Prophet mocked at Baal and destroyed all his priests;² [p. 285] in that case heathen priests were destroyed, and in this case false gods, which by the error of their reproof made devils to abound to the destruction and annihilation of those who were obedient unto them. And after the burning of their images of accursed devils they all went to that city, being glad and rejoicing in the victory which the soldier of Christ, who had been sent for the conversion and life of their souls, had wrought. And they all began to build the glorious building of a church, and Mâr Elijah ordered it with all its arrangements, and he baptized many of them, and ordained them priests and deacons, and he wrote out psalms for them, and taught them the responses, and thus little by little they became virtuous, and increased, and the grace of Christ grew and dwelt in them. And they received the conviction in their hidden nature that they were in very truth converted from error to the light of life, and they laid fast hold upon the ordinances of the seasons of prayer, and the receiving of the Holy Mysteries, and they were sanctified in their manner of life, and the sun of the mind of God shone upon them, Who called them and brought them near, and made them members of His household. And when they were confirmed in their hope, and had become members of the household of this man in all the ordering of the Christians, that blessed man praised and glorified [God], and gave thanks unto our Lord, that the first seed which he had sowed in his plot of ground had come up in seed buds,¹ and had given birth to ears, and had produced wheat and a granary full of wheat and grain.² And when he had tarried with them for many years, the holy man was minded to come to this country to worship in the holy monastery of the house of his fathers, and to return. And when he had done this, and had come here,¹ he shewed to all his brethren the conversion of those erring nations which, by his hands, had been converted to life and redemption, and how he had built for them a church, and how he had baptized and sanctified them, and [how] they had become participators [p. 286] in his joy in divine gratitude for these things. And Mâr Jacob the Bishop of the country of Margâ, came to this monastery with certain well-known believers of this country, and he and the whole assembly of monks entreated him not to leave this country to return there before he had gone round about through it, and had blessed its inhabitants, and healed the sick, and visited the smitten that were in it; and certain old and venerable brethren of the congregation were appointed to go round about with him from village to village. And the pious Bishop Jacob wrote to all the believers, saying, "Behold I have entreated the pious and holy Mâr Elijah, Bishop of Môḵân, the strenuous soldier of virtue and the doer of mighty deeds, to go forth and round about among all the villages which ye inhabit that ye may be blessed by his holiness. Now therefore any one of you who hath any [cause for] judgment, or who wisheth to receive the laying on of hands for grades of the Holy Church, hath the power to settle the idle matters of his contention before Mâr Elijah and to receive ecclesiastical ordination." And the venerable old man Sergius said to me, "I was one of those who accompanied him from the monastery, and when all the believing men heard [of him] they came out to meet us from a great distance, and they brought us into their churches with service and honour, and a great crowd accompanied us from one village to another; and he healed and made whole the sick and the afflicted, and cast out devils by the word of his mouth. And heathen and Jews came to be blessed by him, and by his means the [p. 287] praise of God increased in the mouth of the inhabitants of this country who saw the sick that were made whole, and the deaf and the dumb who heard and spake." Now of all his wonders and mighty deeds which he wrought in this country I can only describe and write down one or two, but from these the reader will understand concerning all the mighty deeds of his wonderful acts and boldness of speech¹ with Christ Who made him victorious. And that trustworthy old man Sergius, who went about with him through the whole country said, "He never sat upon an ass during the whole [time] of our going round about through this country. Now he acted thus all his life, for he walked upon his feet at an easy pace, and a psalm was never absent from his mouth. And at the words "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost," which [came] between each marmîthâ,² he used to bow down and prostrate himself to the ground as a mark of honour, and he did not refrain from this even when he was [walking] upon stones, or briars or any other [thorny] growth, and at every place [in the psalm] where he ought to say the Gloria, he bowed down until he touched the ground with his head. Now when he had arrived at the city of Shaḥrai, the people saw him and came forth to meet him from this village, and they begged and entreated him to go into the house of a poor Arab woman who was afflicted with an evil devil, and pray for her, and he did so. And when we had gone in he commanded me to say, 'Peace', and he himself prayed and made the sign of the cross before the woman, who was in great affliction and was beaten so mightily by that devil that four women were [obliged to] hold her and to kneel upon her that the devil might not break her to pieces with the blows [p. 288] and beatings with which he rent her. Now the devil through the mouth of that woman began [to give utterance] in the Arabic tongue to wicked blasphemies and horrible abuse of the blessed man. And since he wore hung round his neck the Book of the Gospels instead of a cross", (even as I have written in a preceding passage¹), "he brought it forth from his bosom, and laid it on the breast of that woman, at the same time anathematising and adjuring the devil to come forth from that woman. And when the devil had acted with great insolence, and had contended against the command of the holy man,—now the holy man was ordering him to depart from her with quietness,—his answers began to fail little by little. And he answered in the Arabic tongue

and said to the blessed man, "Where dost thou command me to go, O bishop?" And the blessed man answered and said to him, "For the sake of our Lord, thou wilt not be restrained until thou goest to Harran, and moreover, by the word of our Lord thou art bound not to return to this woman again." And as the entire village being gathered together, was listening to the words of the holy man, and the answers of that devil to his speech, the devil began to go forth from her, and he cried out in Arabic, saying, "Ho,¹ let us go to Harran, ho, let us go to Harran," many times, "the road is before us, let us go to Harran."² And we heard his voice as he cried out in the air, going towards the west, for a long time, and [then] little by little his voice died away and became inaudible to us in the distance. And fear and trembling laid hold upon all those that were there, [p. 289] and they began to glorify Christ and to magnify his servant the blessed Mâr Elijah; and that woman received a complete cure, and she confessed the power of Christ, and lived freed from the attacks of the devil a life of gratitude to Christ our Lord, and she proclaimed, "There is no true belief except among the holy Christian people."

And again, another woman entrusted an exceedingly valuable pledge to a neighbour, and when she demanded it back from her she denied her, saying, "Thou hast never given any pledge to me, and I cannot pay it back." And the defrauded woman drew nigh to this blessed man, and he sent and called the other woman, and said to her, "Behold, the pledge which thy neighbour gave thee is lying in such and such a place in thy house, bring it hither, and defraud her not lest the anger of the Lord come upon thee;" and when she saw that she was made a mockery, she at once returned to that woman the things which belonged to her, that she might not be exposed in other matters also. Now very many other things were wrought by the holy man which I need not take the trouble to write down, because I only wish to receive some small blessing from the glorious deeds of these holy men, and to pass on. And when he had gone round about throughout all this country, and had been blessed in his holy steps and had made judicial decisions, and ordained priests and deacons, he came into this monastery. Now when God the Lord of all saw his troubles and afflictions, and the length of his years, and the greatness of his age, in order that he might not die in exile, far away from the house of his fathers, like the blessed Moses whom He buried on Mount Nebo¹ [p. 290] that he might not be disturbed by the war of the Canaanites, and the slaughter of insolent kings, He willed that this blessed man also should rest from a life full of anxiety and care; and he fell sick of a slight ailment, and so departed from [this] temporary life to the enjoyment of everlasting life. And our holy father Mâr Abraham the Catholicus told me, saying. "While many of us were gathered together about him at the hour of his departure, he sat and spake with us concerning his separation from us. And he commanded us to say the response of baptism [which runs], “The¹ doors of the spiritual marriage chamber are opened for the absolution of men,” while he sat with his hands laid upon his knees. And when we had come [to the passage] “Enter in then ye that are called to the joy which hath been prepared for you,” he opened his mouth three times [to join in the singing], and his soul departed from his body with the joy which was prepared for him. And marvelling we understood that he actually saw and beheld with the hidden eye of his mind the happiness which had been prepared for him, and that it was because of this he had asked us to sing this baptismal response, and that the rest and happiness which is laid up for the righteous baptized firstborn whose [names] are written² down in heaven had assumed a visible form. And he was buried with great ceremony and honour by all the congregation of

The gates of the spiritual chamber of the Bridegroom are opened for the forgiveness of the sins of men, and through the gift of the Spirit from on high mercy and peace are now vouchsafed to all mankind. Enter in, therefore, O ye who are called; enter into the joy which is prepared for you, and with pure and sanctified hearts, and true faith, give thanks unto Christ our Saviour. THE HISTORY OF THE BLESSED MĀR NARSAI (NARSES),
BISHOP OF THE CITY OF SHENNĀ.²

Now every spiritual gift cometh down from above from the Father of lights, according to the words of the divine James in the Catholic Epistle,³ and the light which shineth upon our holy temples beareth the mark of spiritual knowledge, according to the affirmation of Evagrius the spiritual philosopher, and according to David, the prophet of the Spirit who said to God, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path,"¹ and the Lord of the Prophets and Apostles stated definitely that He was 'the Light of the world',² and that, even as the Scriptures say, "Rivers of living water should flow from the belly"³ of whomsoever believeth in Him. It is well known then that all the holy men who were authors of works upon the healthful doctrine of orthodoxy, whether of history, or doctrine, or prayer, or admonition, have drunk from the abundant streams of the sweetness of the Gospel, which like the breath of life is placed for the cooling of their bitterness. And they have filled the Church with the spiritual light of the glorious rays of their understanding, and they have enlightened the assemblies of its children, and they have made them to know and to understand that while they make use of those footsteps they must set their own feet in the paths which lead to the height above, where Christ our Lord sitteth on the right hand [of God], and maketh intercession for them, although they do not actually make perfect this ascent except by mysteries and types. [p. 292] And I also, who am subject to all passions, have been obliged through the entreaty of many to write down also the history of the blessed⁴ and holy Mâr Narses, Bishop of the city of Kârdâlâbhâdh,⁵ which is Shennâ dhě Bêth Rammân, and to teach it together with those of the holy men his companions. And because I am a man lacking all wisdom, from the Light, the Father of light, according to the words of the holy and wise Dionysius, I ask for a gift and the bestowal of power, to enable me to

of piety and persecutions, and moreover this style is appropriate for hymns [p. 293] and for the sweet penitential compositions which are sung to tunes, but not for history. "And when we had seen it", he saith, "we rejected it, and we did not miss it, and the leaves were torn by reason of the lapse of time, and because it was not suitable we have not copied it into our book." But I will now set down in writing, for the gratification of those who have commanded me, some of the things which I have learned from Eustathius, and from the monks who lived in the holy Monastery of Abbâ Simon¹ of Shennâ, but more especially from the aged monks who were to be found in my days in the holy monastery of Bêth 'Âbhê, and from the Tigris boatmen and fishermen whom I have seen; and taking refuge in the prayers of those who told me the stories, and of those who commanded me to write them, and of readers, and listeners, I will go into the sweet-smelling garden laid out and cultivated by the holy Mâr Narses, and I will write briefly about him, even as I have written about his companions, some few matters to commemorate his holiness.

CHAPTER XIII.

OF THE ORIGIN OF THE BLESSED MÂR NARSES AND OF HIS COMING TO THIS MONASTERY.

There was in the country of Bêth Bêghâsh² a famous village called Zârn, the inhabitants of which were warriors, and they all were mighty men of valour. Not only did they pursue thieves, and make raids, but they also shewed themselves fierce and disobedient to the royal officers who came to them for the imperial taxes, and many of them they fearlessly drove away with blows. [p. 294] From this village then came the blessed man, whose noble deeds I am about to relate, and he and his brother whose name was Shalmân, and his only sister sprang from a family of believers, and from people who were prosperous as regards the affairs of this world. And the manner of life of each brother was as different as that of the blessed Jacob and of Esau, for Shalmân carried a sword and shed the blood, not of the good but of wicked men. And because the Khartëwâyê¹ had at that time begun [to commit acts] of destruction and theft, Shalmân armed himself, and having gathered together a body of men, he put an end to many of the Khartëwâyê by cutting off their heads. And the rumour is reported of him that every day in which he did not lie down upon the skull of some malefactor whom he had slain with his own hands as upon a pillow, his food was without taste and unpleasant to him. And like Esau he was a man of the chase and a man of the desert, but his brother, the holy Narses, elected to live the ascetic life in an admirable manner, and he firmly stamped into himself—like the impression on a dînâr—the [qualities] of the blessed Jacob, gentleness and sweetness, and praiseworthy obedience to his parents. Now their sister be-

H. 183, Huzaima bin Hâzim, حَزْبِیْمَةُ بن خازم, who drove the Hazars through the gates of the Caucasus and who fortified Marâga (see Al-Belâdhorî, Liber Expugnationis Regionum [ed. de Goeje, Leyden 1863], p. 330), was appointed governor of Adhôr bâîgân to resist his might (see Ibn al-Athîr, tom. vi. p. 111; Ṭabarî tom. iii. p. 648). Zuraiķ conquered Urmiya, and together with his brother, built castles there (Belâdhorî, p. 331; Ibn al-Faķîh al-Hamadhânî [ed. de Goeje 1885] p. 284, l. 19). Zuraiķ was appointed governor of Armenia and Adhôr bâîgân by al-Mâmûn, A. H. 209, to fight against Bâbek al-Hurramî بابک الخرمی, by whom, however, he was vanquished (Ṭabarî, tom. iii. p. 1072; Ibn al-Athîr, tom. vi. p. 338). Previous to A. H. 211, Zuraiķ made war against al-Sayyed bin Anas, السیّد بن آنس, who had been Emîr of Môşul and Margâ since A. H. 202, and attacked him in that year with 40,000 men and slew him (Ibn al-Athîr, tom. vi. p. 248). Muḥammad bin Humaid al-Ṭûsî (الطوسی), who had been made Wâlî of Môşul by al-Mâmûn (see Ibn al-Athîr, tom. vi. p. 287; al-Ya'qubî, Historiae [ed. nors of Mōṣul and of all the north, and who during the time of his rule made great gifts to the Church, and to her children, and to her directors. And when Rabban Mâr Narses had become a young man, having by the care and pains taken about him by his parents been trained in the Holy Scriptures [p. 295] in the church of their native village, at which time each man turneth to the right hand or to the left according to the nature which is implanted in his earthy composition, and sheweth in his manner of life either nobility or depravity of nature, he elected to become a disciple [of purity], and left the house of his fathers, and all the wealth of their possessions; and he despised the love of brethren and of relatives, and came to the holy monastery of Bêth Âbhê, and worked in the monastery, as the canons of the Fathers order; and it came to pass that an accident happened to the advantage of himself and for the benefit of the 'purity of the body with which he was clothed. Now when he was with the other monks his companions shaking down the olives from the olive trees in the large garden of the community, having gone up into one of the trees he slipped down between the fork of the branches, and his testicles were crushed. And he fell into a severe illness and these members had to be cut off from him altogether, and

and a safe-conduct, الامان (Ya'qubî p. 564, l. 18). When Zuraiḳ came to him he sent him to the court of the Khalîfa, who at once ordered that all the wealth and possessions of Zuraiḳ and of his family should be confiscated. This order was not, however, strictly carried out, for H̄umaid entered into negotiations with Zuraiḳ's brethren, and part of Zuraiḳ's wealth was returned to his family.

And when he had gone forth from service in the monastery, he built himself a little cell far away from the community (which is well known to this day and in which there still exists an olive tree which the holy man himself planted), to the east of the monastery, and below the [Little] Fortress;¹ and when he had come to dwell in it, he made himself a place for weeping, and as he regarded himself as living in a grave he hid himself therein with humility and weeping of tears. And although he excused himself from the society of those who wished to increase in virtue by reading and conversing and singing the Psalms [with him], yet because he was a neighbour of the holy Mâr Cyriacus, whose history I have written a little above,² he visited him, and it was sufficient for him. For they had been fellow-workers in the monastery, and contemporaries; they were the children of one love, for they were to become the children of one kingdom;³ they were the sons of one monastery, for they were about to become heads of the monasteries which are in heaven; one was their communion, for they lived under one directorship; one was their doctrine, for they had been made wise by the Master of teachers; fellows under one yoke were they, for they had both ploughed the same spiritual furrow; two mighty arms were they of one body, and two⁴ brilliant eyes were they of one body; and both of them were appointed shepherds of cities, which are [situated] on the great river Tigris, the righteous men of the new [dispensation only], so that they became gods among men, but heathen philosophers also, before the coming of our Lord, and before the revelation of His dispensation, gained therefrom the riches of sublime and glorious knowledge, and they enriched others [thereby]. Pythagoras¹ the master of philosophers, from the experience which he had gained during a long [interval of] time, said, "Without the lying fallow of the body in restraint, and the silence of the tongue from speaking, philosophy can never be acquired." And he commanded all those who were being taught in his school to keep silence for five years, and the entrance to wisdom was taught by him in that school by hearing and sight only. And the wise man Homer,² having lived in the desert for many years making his mind to fly about collecting knowledge, [p. 298] arrived at a subtle perception which he received through solitude and silence; and by means of chemicals, and fire, and a furnace he transmuted lead into silver,³ and brass into gold, and formed precious stones

God the Lord of all bestowed the wisdom which they sought after, or by reason of their affliction, or as it were for the benefit of others by the labour of the deepest tranquillity and silence and absence from mankind, made them glad, how much [more] to the holy men who keep His commandments, and who train themselves according to His will by hunger and thirst, and suffering, and tears, and prayer day and night, will He give not [only] the wisdom of [this] world, which they have not sought after, but the kingdom for which they suffer, and make them to enjoy the pledge of it here?

Now the holy man Mâr Narses received a gift of the fruits of a tranquil life which is beloved by all the fathers, and which is the completion of all excellence, that is to say a constant flowing of tears which never ceased from him. And an old man from this monastery whose name was Tûmânâ, whom I have mentioned in the history of Rabban Cyriacus, told me that when the blessed Narses came to the congregation he used to wrap himself up in the covering of his cap¹ so that the flowing of his tears might not be seen; now this was also said of him by the believing men of Shennâ. And when one of the brethren asked a certain old man, saying, "How is it, father, that although my soul desireth tears they are not given to it?" he replied to him, "My son, tears are the land of promise, for as long as a man is without tears he journeyeth in the wilderness with the children of Israel; but when he arriveth at the gift of tears he entereth into the land of promise.¹ And because this great gift, for which not every man is sufficient, is much needed for the watching of humility,² [p. 300] a man should train himself to despise himself and to hold everything in contempt in such a manner as not to be deprived of this great wealth and gift." And let him hearken unto the advice with which the blessed Evagrius ordereth him, saying, "Even though thou shouldst have a fountain of tears in thy prayer, be not in any wise exalted in thyself, [thinking] that thou art greater than many [other men], for thou wilt [only] have received help from thy prayer [when] thou hast discovered [how] to confess thy sins with diligence, and to pacify thy Lord by thy tears. Do not then turn to the passion of pride that which is the destroyer of the passions, lest peradventure thou shalt offend the more Him that hath bestowed grace upon thee; for there are many who have wept for their sins, but because they have forgotten the end and aim of tears they have been smitten with madness." And the blessed Mark the monk saith, "If thou hast tears in thy prayer be not lifted up, for Christ hath drawn near to thine eyes, and thou hast obscurely seen the Light." And because in proportion as the soul is exalted to the height of excellence, mighty adversaries make attacks upon it, according to the words of the holy Evagrius, [let a man] spiritually adorn himself with the deepest humility, and with watchfulness of every thing round about him through abstraction and contemplative power, lest peradventure when he conquereth in the war of fornication, he whom he hath overcome may accidentally ensnare him, and he be led captive by the Evil One to the cruelty of wrath, or even if he endure this he fall¹ into the abyss of envy and anger, or if he be free from these things he be led astray by avarice and vain-glory. For it is more difficult to preserve excellence than it is to labour for it, even as saith a certain holy man, [p. 301] "If thou shouldst put all the labours of virtue on one side, and the observance² of them on the other, the observance of them would outweigh them;³ for the glory of the actions of a man's life and the purity of his heart are like unto the entrance into the love of his Lord, and Christ will thus sanctify him to be a pure temple unto Him." For in this manner doth act that gracious Lord Who doth not withhold the hire of those who labour in the garden of His Gospel. And when He findeth a pure spot He sanctifieth it for the dwelling of His Will, and crowneth it with the glorious honour of the revelations of His wonders, and when it is manifest to His inscrutable wisdom that the hidden pupils of the eyes of a man, which are within, cannot be injured by the glorious brightness of the beauties of his splendours, He maketh him to be an altar of His revelations, and He maketh the mind to be a priest in the holy of holies of the heart,¹ which is within, with secret hymns of praise which are akin to the holy hymns of spiritual beings. And this holy man concerning whom our insipid narrative relates lived in the enjoyment of such things as these for many years and excelled; but the time draweth nigh, indeed hath already come when he must receive the ordination² of the five talents,³ and must administer like a wise servant the treasures of his master to the members of the house.

OF THE ELECTION OF THE HOLY MÂR NARSES TO BE BISHOP OF THE CITY OF KÂRDÂLÎÂBHÂDH WHICH IS SHENNÂ.

[P. 302] Now since the spirit of the Prophets is subject unto Prophets, and [since] revelations conceive a fulfilment before the time for their being carried out hath arrived, because they are made manifest and pointed out by a hand which is of the Holy Spirit, so also according to⁴ the spiritual vision which the blessed Mâr Cyriacus, Bishop of Bâlâdh, had seen some years before—as I have made known above—concerning the election of the holy Mâr Narses and of many others, the time drew near and came for him to be appointed to the direction of the Church. Now he¹ was made manifest by the hand of God through the blessed father, Shûbhḥâl-Mâran, the ascetic and head of the Monastery of Shennâ, the murder of whom we are about to describe in this history, and he made known to those believing men that the Spirit of the Lord had set apart the holy Mâr Narses, the ascetic from Bêth 'Âbhê, to be a shepherd and governor of their church. And Christ also urged them through him to go after him without delay, and they went down to the pious Mâr Timothy, and made known to him that he must ordain as their Bishop Rabban Narses the solitary and ascetic. And Mâr Timothy wrote [and sent] by their hands a canonical letter ordering Mâr Narses not to dispute the Divine choice, and when this blessed man had read it,² and saw that in any case he was bound and compelled to appear before the Patriarchal throne, he assented to the Divine Will and departed with them, and was consecrated by the Patriarchal hands and by the prayers of the chief priests, and he was reckoned like Matthias³ in the series and company of the priests of the Church. How very fitting is it to introduce in this place the Divine word which was spoken by the Lord to the holy prophet Zechariah,⁴ saying, "Take of [them of] the captivity, [even] of Hûldî (Heldai), of Ṭûbhyâ (Tobijah), and of Îdha'yâ (Jedaiah), and go into the house of Josiah the son of Zephaniah, who hath come from Babylon; take his silver and his gold, and make a crown and put [it] on the head of Îshô^c bar-Yôzâdhâḵ, the high priest."

[p. 303] Now when [Mâr Narses] had gone into his city, and had been received with the ceremony and honour of which his piety was worthy, the city of Shennâ became enviable¹ in the sight of the other cities, and [it was] as if the psalm of the blessed David² had been said of them, "The Lord hath multiplied to do these [things] for us," and they had answered, "The Lord hath multiplied to do for us, and we are glad," and again, "The Lord hath brought back upon us His good gifts together with His gracious acts like the water brooks that are in the South."³ And the holy [Mâr Narses], like a vigilant watchman of the flock which had been entrusted to him, kept a strict and careful watch on all sides upon the sheep of his flock that none of those believing men under his pastoral care might stray in the slightest degree from what was right. And he became like a wall to that flock, and like a spiritual boatman he held the oars of that spiritual ship, and guided it through the storms and waves of [this] world, and brought it to the mansions of heaven. And like a wise gardener he cleansed and purified from it as from a garden all the bad shoots and stubborn roots, and he drew water for the fruit-bearing trees, and he made the sweet herbs to grow up and to flourish, and he protected their fruit that

CHAPTER XV.

OF THE SPIRITUAL CONTEMPLATION AND OF THE INTELLECTUAL PLEASURE IN THE THREE [KINDS OF] SPIRITUAL MEDITATIONS, ON THE CORPOREAL, ON THE INCORPOREAL, AND ON THE HOLY TRINITY, IN WHICH THE HOLY MÂR NARSES WAS TRAINED AND MEDITATED PHILOSOPHICALLY.

Certain of the fathers have written in their books that there existeth in the heart a glorious intellectual mirror which the Creator of natures formed from all the visible and spiritual natures which are in creation for the great honour of His image, and as a means for discovering His invisibility; and He made it a tie, and a bond, and a completion of all natures. Now the fathers call it the "beauty of our person," and by Saint Paul it is called the "house of love," and by the doctors the "house of peace," and by the wise the "house of goodness," and by others the "house of joy," [p. 305] in which dwelleth the spirit of adoption which we have received from holy baptism, and upon it shineth the light of grace. And whosoever hath cleansed this mirror of beautiful things from the impurity of the passions and from sin, and hath renewed it and established it in the original condition of the nature of its creation, can see by the light of its glorious rays all spiritual things which belong to natures and to things of creation which are afar off and which are near. And he is able by the secret power of the Holy Spirit to look into them closely as if they were all arranged in order, without any covering whatever, before his eyes. And when the working of God dawneth upon the souls of holy men there dwelleth and abideth¹ upon it this gift of the Holy Spirit, and He bestoweth this gift upon the good, and maketh them to possess life and happiness for ever. And even thus, according to what I have heard from those who saw his glorious deeds, was the holy man of whom we are about to speak worthy [of this gift].

Now there was in the Monastery of the holy Abbâ Simon of Shennâ,² an old man whose name was Mârî, and this man related to me concerning³ the holy man, that inasmuch as the blessed man was endowed with the knowledge [of God], and his mind was continually carried away towards God, he was unable to keep himself from this holy contemplation; and as in [the case of] many [other] things he was prevented from going down to the service of the Holy Mysteries on the first days of the weeks, it was thought by the believers that he acted thus by reason of the weight of his old age. And it came to pass on a certain first day of the week, when he was forced by the elect of God, Rabban Shûbhḥâl-Mâran, the head of our monastery, to be with him in the pulpit for the performing of the service of the church, that Mâr Shûbhḥâl-Mâran saw that he was occupied in meditating upon this subject and in doing so he saw that he became unconscious of every human feeling and movement, so much so that he was utterly unmindful of the necessary acts which the service of psalmody required, [p. 306] to sit down¹ for the *ḵeryânê*², and to lead off in the exordia,³ and he saw that his eyes were closed and that he did not know where he was. And as soon as Rabban Shûbhâhâl-Mâran had gone up with him to his cell, he fell at his feet and took an oath, saying, "I will not stand up again until thou shalt have revealed unto me concerning the vision which was seen by thee in the church." And the holy Mâr Narses having required the head of the monastery to keep this matter secret until his death, answered and said to him, "Every time I am in the church during the service of the Mysteries, my mind is lifted up above the sight of these things which are done during the service, and above the church and its congregation, to the things

¹ "Before the reading of the Ḵeryânâ the deacon exclaims aloud: 'Sit down, and be silent;' and when it is ended, the people rise at the bidding of the same minister, who then gives notice of the short psalm which is to follow, and which is then taken up and sung by the officiating priest. This psalm is called Shûrâyâ, and generally consists of two verses taken from the Psalter to which the Gloria Patri is added. The Shûrâyâ, therefore, appears to hold the same place in the Nestorian liturgy, as the tractus does in the Roman, the προκείμενον in the Constantinopolitan, and the psalmellus in the Milan liturgies." The lights which are in the chancel fill the place of Divine splendour, and the knowledge Divine in all things by which all the companies of spiritual beings sparkle and shine. The censer which hath been transmitted by the priests, from hand to hand, in order, from the priests of the early [period] to those of the middle [period], and from the priests of the middle period to those of these last times, [represents] the doctrine of the things which are about to come to pass, and of the things which must needs be, and which the Divine dispensation demandeth, and which the angels receive by teaching from one another. And the knowledge of things which are about to come to pass, and the insight into things which are hidden, and the

The Lords are a motion which is entrusted with the government of the motions beneath it; the Powers are the minister of the will of God; and Rulers are a motion which hath power over spiritual treasures. This class of angels governs the luminaries, the sun, moon and stars. The Principalities are a defined motion which possesseth the direction of the upper ether, of rain, cloud, lightning, thunder, whirlwinds, tempests, winds, etc.; the Archangels are a swift operative motion which governeth the animal creation and everything that hath life, from the gnat to the elephant; and the Angels are a motion which hath spiritual knowledge of everything that is on earth and in heaven. The number of each one of these classes of angels is equal to the number of all mankind from Adam to the resurrection."

gratification and joy which we receive therefrom are like unto the sweet scents which the censer breatheth forth in our holy temples. The gathering of us all in the church [symbolises] the universal assembling which [shall take place] before the face of our Lord in the celestial heights. Our choirs which face each other, and the service which is sung by two choirs,¹ represent those which cry each to each, and say, "Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord the mighty One,"² etc. So then by reason of the contemplation of these things which are before my sight,³ O chosen one of Christ, I am exalted to the incorporeal congregations of the spiritual beings, and I forget myself, and I pass over by the mental faculty⁴ which I abstract from these typical objects⁵ to the prototype⁶ which is depicted upon my understanding by these things which are above the world. [p. 308] And on account of this many, many times I have kept myself back from going into the holy temple on days of assembling for holy feasts, and since I am occupied in this enjoyment every first day of the week, in order that I may not be accounted a drunkard and remote from knowledge and understanding of those things which are being performed during the festivals, I remain in my cell that I may not appear to be such to the simple and pure minds of the saints. For our Lord when pronouncing the Beatitudes spake, saying, Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see the living God;"¹ and again, "I and my Father will come, and we will make a dwelling with them";² and again, "I will dwell in you and walk in you, and they shall be one with us, even as Thou and I, O my Father, are one".³

And moreover this same very aged man Mârî who related to me the things [above] concerning [Mâr Narses], also told me saying:—"Once Abbâ Shûbhḥâl-Mâran asked him concerning the questions and answers of the old men which are written in the Book of Paradise,⁴ saying, 'How is it, master, that the excellent Palladius was able to carry in his memory an innumerable multitude of questions and to set them down in writing? Have they not been altered since the time when they were spoken by the fathers and by those who asked them?' And the holy Mâr Narses answered him, saying, 'The histories of the holy fathers which have written above them [the statement] that they were composed by him, were actually written by him, but the questions and their answers he gathered together from the collections of the books of the Fathers. Now on the holy days of the Passover, [p. 309] and the Passion, and the Resurrection, when they were going forth from the restraint of fasting, between one service and the other, the holy fathers were accustomed to sit down with the novices before them, and scribes wrote down the questions which were asked and the explanations of them, and counsels, and answers, and they placed them in writing for their own benefit, and for the benefit of those who should come after them; and Divine grace worked upon the holy Bishop Palladius, and he gathered them together'. And this thought hath at times greatly troubled me also, but it was shewn to me secretly that these things were written down in this manner; and it is well known to us that the revelation and knowledge of this [matter] became known unto him by the hand of the holy angel which clave unto him."

CHAPTER XVI.

OF THOSE THINGS WHICH WERE WROUGHT BY THE HOLY MÂR NARSES, SOME BY SPIRITUAL VISION, AND SOME BY THE WORKING OF MIRACLES, AND OF THE END OF HIS LIFE.

If any man desireth to learn concerning all the wonderful acts and mighty deeds of healing which the holy man ever wrought, let him go to that believing city [of Shennâ,] and he will hear about all the glorious and excellent things which were performed by the hands of that holy person, not only from priests and deacons, and ordinary believing men, [p. 310] but also from a host of women and children, for behold, to this day his wonderful acts are spoken of daily. I, however, will write down a few pleasant memorials [of him] out of the many things which I have heard concerning him, even as I have done in the case of the histories of the holy men his companions, leaving out the remainder which are beyond counting, for I must bring the writing of my history to a close. Now the venerable Eustathius told me that there were certain believing people¹ in the royal city of Bagdad who had an only son about twenty years old, who when he was three years of age had fallen sick of the palsy, and he was grievously afflicted by severe pains for seven years until he became abhorred by his parents by reason of this disease. And they would even have preferred his death [to his being alive]; for he received no benefit at all from the physicians, and he found no relief from the prayers and gifts which his parents distributed on his behalf among the needy. Now the blessed Mâr Narses had a man sick of the palsy in the house of a certain rich God-fearing believer in Bagdad, and one year the holy man went down to see the Catholicus Mâr Timothy. And when those people learned and heard from many concerning the gift of healing which the blessed man possessed, they went to Mâr Catholicus and entreated him to write to the holy man Mâr Narses to command that the boy should be brought to him, so that he might pray over him, that peradventure by [his] help he might receive healing. And he wrote through them [to him], saying, "Inasmuch as thy holiness hath received the gift from the Holy Spirit, which hath prepared for itself the working of mighty deeds, [p. 311] and cures of sicknesses according to thy piety through the virtues of the spirit and of the body which it hath gathered together and placed [in thee], and inasmuch as our Lord hath trusted thee to be steward of His household, and to work wonderful deeds, and hath set me in the third¹ grade of teaching, as the blessed Paul glorieth, and inasmuch as these believing people have required of me to write to thy holiness to command them to bring to thee their sick son who is struggling with disease, I entreat thee to do this, and to let the young man be brought to thee, and to let him be blessed by thy holy right hand; and our Lord Christ shall heal him also of the infirmity which hath become confirmed in him, even as He hath healed others by thy hands". And when the blessed man had read the letter, he commanded them to bring the young man to him. And Eustathius swore that they took the young man, who was lying in his bed² upon his back and was unable to turn upon either side, to the upper chamber of the blessed man, and Mâr Narses commanded them, saying, "Go to your house, and at mid-day come and take away your son." And when they had come back according to his command and the masters of the house had informed him, he commanded the young man, who had been made whole and sound by the might of the prayer of the blessed man, and he went down the steps of the staircase of the gallery with leaps, like the paralytic whom the Apostles healed in Jerusalem;¹ and he induced and moved all men to give praise to God, the Lord of all, Who had visited our evil generation in the person of this holy man; and this thing was known throughout all the city.

[p. 312] And again there lived in the city of Shennâ a well-known believer, who had an only son, who when he was eight years of age departed from this world through the destructive work of magic. And when the blessed man heard the sound of the funeral service with which the boy was being carried to the cemetery, and the noise of the crowd, and the weeping of his parents as they arrived at the door of the church, he stood at the door holding the stick upon which his old age was supported, and commanded them, saying, "Enter in all of you, and [bring] the dead body with you, that we may perform a short service over it in the church"; and the people did so, and the bier was set down in the place where the services were held.²

² ܩܘܪܒܢܐ ܕܥܘܠܐ, literally, "the place of the liturgy." It seems to have been that part of the church which was just in front of the ܩܘܪܒܢܐ, which was called by the Greeks σωλέα (see Du Cange, Glossarium, col. 1513), and to which the Nestorians to-day give the name of ܩܘܪܒܢܐ. The bodies of laymen are not carried into the church as a general rule; see Badger, Nestorians, vol. ii. p. 297. The leader of the singing was called ܩܘܪܒܢܐ ܕܥܘܠܐ i. e., κανονάρχος (Du Cange, Glossarium, col. 583). Some interesting remarks on the singing of the Psalms and their division into kathismata, and the hours for prayer will be found in Usener, Der heilige Theodosios, p. 45, l. 19

And the blessed man commanded every one to bow down in worship and to kneel, and he commanded the parents of the boy to untie the cords and bandages with which he was bound, and he took hold of his hand, and said to him, "By the might of our God, rise up", and the boy sat up alive. And the blessed man answered and said, "The death of your son was an act of magicians, but henceforth fear not, for he shall not suffer this mischance a second time;" and every one glorified God and returned to their houses.

Now the blessed man had as a disciple, a certain priest whose name was Cyprian, and this man told [me], saying, "One night while I was sleeping in the outer courtyard [of the house] of the holy man, and he was inside, he came out to me hastily, and stirred and roused me up, and he answered and said to me sadly, 'Rise up, my son, and take with thee a little bread and a jar of water, and a rope, and take with thee a donkey, and go quickly to the ruined village of Hammîmâ, and go into a ruined house which is in such and such a place, and behold there is there a dry well into which a man has fallen, and thieves threw him into it two days ago; draw him up and lift him out, and feed him with bread and water, and set him upon the animal and bring him hither'. [p. 313] And I answered and said to him, 'Be patient a little, master, and with the dawn I will set out, for I am afraid lest some harm should happen to me on the road during the night time.' And the holy man answered and said to me, 'My son, go quickly before that stranger die, and I will be a pledge to thee that neither evil hap nor injury shall befall thee.' "And", said Cyprian, "through [my] confidence in the word of the blessed man I did what he commanded me, and I went to the ruined village according to the indications which he had given me. And I stood above the well, and I cried out, and there answered me [a man] who chattered like a bird, and I drew him up, and lifted him out, and I brought him to the city to Mâr Narses. And he remained with him until he was healed of the bruises and wounds in his limbs, and with a blessing he bestowed upon him a prayer for the way, and sent him away from his house."

"And again, one day at dawn he called me, and said to me, 'Go to-day to the banks of the Tigris and command the sailors that not one of them unmoor his boat to cross over to the other side, that their ships be not broken and sunk, for a violent storm is about to arise through a mighty wind'—now this wind actually arrived—; 'and the boat and all the cargo of every man who doth not receive what I have said shall perish', now it was the season of the great flood when the rivers Tigris and the Little Zâb overflow."¹

“And again, on another occasion, there began to be a pestilence in the city of Mâr Narses, and the believers entreated him to allow them to decree a solemn supplication to God on account of this. And he said to them, ‘That we should make a solemn supplication is a good thing to do, but death, which is your master, [p. 314] will not be stayed unless he hath taken from among your souls according to the number which God hath decreed shall be taken from you as a punishment.’ Now he privily made known the number to his disciple, and when this limit was reached the sword of death rested and stayed.”

𐎶 𐎠𐎺𐎠 𐎶𐎠𐎺𐎠 𐎶𐎠𐎺𐎠) became a mighty stream, and it was not hard to understand how very materially this river which Sennacherib tells us he brought to Nineveh (Rawlinson, Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia, vol. iii. pl. 14, l. 11), must have helped to destroy the palaces of his great city. The yellow Tigris flowed along with its swollen stream at the rate of 5½ or 6 miles an hour, and small rafts reached Bagdad in 4½ days, including stoppages of a few hours each night. The distance from Môsul to Bagdad viâ Kerkûk is about 300 miles, and I believe the distance by river to be about 400. The greatest flood of the Tigris and Zâb takes place in April. It may be noticed that Thomas of Margâ used the Syriac form of the Old Assyrian word for “flood”; i. e., 𐎶𐎠𐎺𐎠 = Assyrian mi-lum; see Strassmaier, Wörterverzeichnis, No. 5294, p. 658; Bruno, A Classified List, Leyden 1887, p. 466, No. 11538; Smith, Sennacherib, p. 146, l. 52; Rawlinson, Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia, vol. 1. pl. 57, col. vii. l. 51; and Norris, Assyrian Dictionary, pt. iii. p. 789. Floods on the Tigris are often accompanied by violent south-east winds which literally blow craft up the river or into the banks, and it is necessary to cut the bridges of boats until the wind and stream subside.

“Now there was an exceedingly wicked Arab who surpassed all those who lived in his time and after him in his cruelty and plunderings, and his name was Ya‘lê bar-Himrân of Beni-Taimlah,¹ which is in this country of Adiabene. And this man having brought himself to execute all wickedness, the [shedding of] blood and the slaughter of men were regarded by him as the slaughter² of snakes and scorpions, and his conscience never pricked him because of the blood of the holy men which he cruelly shed. And this man destroyed the Monastery of the holy Rabban Mâr Job, and the Monastery of Bêth Nestorius and the Monastery of Margânâ,³ and he left many places without an inhabitant. He rode a mare without saddle or bridle, and none of the governors was able to overtake him because he could travel in one night twenty farsah, more or less, at a rapid rate, and while he was heard of in this country to-day, to-morrow he was heard of in a very distant one. Now⁵ this utterly wicked man went down to the Monastery of the holy Abbâ Simon, and he went up covertly to the cell of Rabban Shûbhḥâl-Mâran, the head of the monastery, and slew him. And it was revealed to the blessed Mâr Narses, and Cyprian his disciple said, ‘When deep sleep falleth upon man,¹ with sadness and tears he cried to me, saying, [p. 315] 'Rise up, my son, and follow me, and let us go to the Monastery of Abbâ Simon;' and we went forth from the church and arrived at the Tigris, and he made the sign of the cross over the water and he took hold of me with his hand, and said to me, 'Come with me, and fear not.' And we crossed over, and went into the monastery, and he sent me to cry out and to knock at the door of the common-room, and the brethren came out, and I took them to him. And he answered and said to them, with tears, 'Woe to you my brethren, for your chief Shûbhḥâl-Mâran is slain;' and we all went to his cell, and we found that blessed old man smitten with knife and sword wounds. And upon this a great uproar arose, and that murderer from the top of a hill answered and said to us, 'I am Ya'lê bar-Ḥimrân, and I have slain the head of the monastery; after a time I will come and destroy you all.' The holy Mâr Narses said to him, 'If thou dost ever return here I will dry up the mighty river Tigris. The decree of the Highest hath gone forth against thee, and thou wilt be slain by the governor of the city of Ḥadhattâ in the village of Estrenyâ.' And thus our Lord actually did to that murderer, for wishing to come back again to Shennâ, the governor of Ḥadhattâ slew him in Estrenyâ according to the word of the holy man'."

"And also, one year when I for some reason or other was coming up from the low countries with the boatmen along the banks of the Tigris, there met me

above the city of Ḥadhattâ a certain fisherman whose name was Hêshîm,¹ and who having tied up his large net was wishing to cast his *gâwpâ*² into the river.

And he lifted it up in his right hand, and spake with his mouth, saying, 'In the name of the living God, and by the prayer of the holy Mâr Narses.'³ And I said to him, 'How is it that being an Arab thou didst call upon the holy Mâr Narses, a Christian teacher, to help thee by his prayers?' [p. 316] He said to me, 'Upon which Mâr Narses thinkest thou that I called?' And I said to him, 'As I think, Mâr Narses the teacher who lived in Nisibis.'⁴ He said to me, 'That Mâr Narses upon whom I called was the blessed Mâr Narses who was Bishop of Shennâ. For⁵ when I was a boy with my father and we were fishing there, we used to see him continually crossing over upon the water at night-time from his city to the Monastery of Rabban Simon, and back again from the monastery to the city. And when he perceived that we had seen him, he sent his disciple after us early one day, and called my father to him, and he prayed and entreated of him that he would reveal [this] to no man until [after] the holy man's death. And he blessed us, and said to us, 'Every time

“And again, there was a certain Arab² who had never taken anything from any man by fraud or injury, and he was in want, and he went out one night to go and plunder and steal. And after the death of the blessed man he said, ‘I went out to steal, being in want, and I crossed over the Zâb and went to the neighbourhood of Ekrôntâ,³ I and two members of my household, and we took from there many sheep, and a quantity of other things, and we left the guardians who were there strongly bound and beaten. And when we were in the plain opposite Shennâ, behold the blessed man himself was coming towards us, and he met us above the Monastery which is named after Bar-Gâmêsh.⁴ [p. 317] And when the mare which I was riding saw him—now it was a dark night without a moon—she pricked up her ears, and threw up her neck, and I knew that something had appeared to her; and I laid the pointed end of the spear on [her head] between

Now if I were to write down all his acts, how many sick he healed, how many evil devils he drove out from men, and what temptations and trials he endured from bad and vicious men, as well as all his glorious deeds, I think that much time would not be sufficient for this, and that many volumes¹ would not contain the multitude of mighty deeds and wonders which Christ wrought by his hands; and from the time when we began to write our history until now, it hath not been our intention [to do this], but only to give a brief account of each one of the holy fathers. So [Mâr Narses] finished the rest of his days, and rested in peace with all the just and upright men, and his holy body was laid in the holy church of that city, where the holy fathers [who were] Bishops before him lie; and his holy body in that holy church in which he performed the duties of priest, became a haven of help and a fountain of healing for all those who were attacked by any kind of pain and temptation, whether of bodily sickness, or affliction by cruel devils. May our Lord also shew compassion upon us by his prayers, that the remainder of our days may be made perfect according to His good will and pleasure, and may we

THE HISTORY OF THE HOLY ABBÂ JOSEPH.

The greater number of the histories which I have written before this I have written down in order from hearsay and from tradition handed down from one [man] to the other; but the present history, which is now in my hands and which my discourse wisheth to set forth clearly, concerneth the holy and blessed life of Rabban Joseph, of whom I was a contemporary. And moreover I have been blessed by that God-worthy old man, for he departed from affairs of this mortal life to the everlasting¹ house of light in the first² year of my coming to this holy monastery [of Bêth 'Âbhê]. Now this blessed man came from the country of Bêth Garmai, from the district called Bêth Mëshainânê, which is situated on the Lower Zâb, and from his youth up he was a disciple in this your monastery of Bêth 'Âbhê. And from the beginning of his coming out from the world he expelled from his heart all noxious thoughts and emotions, and he renounced every material thing absolutely, and he built himself a cell in that valley which is called Dakhyâ; and he dwelt therein all the days of his life with absolute poverty of the spirit, and he did not possess, according to what is said [about him, the quality] which may be called friendly affection.

his habitation with the door open upon the old man for coolness. And he asked him, saying, [p. 321] "Father, whither didst thou flee from before the Kartěwâyê who came against us this day, and who have carried off all our property?" And being astonished he answered and said, "My son, I did not perceive that thieves had been here;" thus did God guard that man from harm and trouble by those thieves.

Now the pious Hâkîmâ, Bishop of Ghâwkai¹—now one day I went to this blessed man to ask for his prayers, and to be blessed by him—told me [saying], "When I knocked [at his door] and he opened [it] to me, I sat down with him for a little, and [as] he dismissed me to go forth he brought out and gave me a small bowl,² the like of which for manner of make and appearance I had never seen. And he answered and said to me, 'Give this, my son, to such and such an old man, and take it for him as a gift of grace and say to him, Thy gift of grace is accepted, for since thou didst bring me cooked food in this bowl for three days [at a time] nothing was lacking to me.' For behold the Angel of the Lord had brought food to him even as He sent food to Daniel by the hands of Habakkuk, from Judah to Babylon.¹ And I am certain that such was really the case, for when I had taken the bowl to that old man, and had repeated to him these things which Abbâ Joseph had said to me, he swore to me and assured me with an oath, saying, 'It is more than a year since I went to the cell of that blessed man.' Now the angel of the Lord in the form of that old man, had appeared to Abbâ Joseph, who bore hunger inside the door of his cell and who never went outside to knock at any human door to supply his need."

Now there was in this monastery a man whose name was Pâlôhâ, and he was a hireling of the monastery, and was sent by those who were over the affairs of the monastery to cut wood [and to bring it] in a boat. Now Rabban Joseph had the day before gone to the holy Monastery of Rabban Mâr Îshô^c-Zëkhâ, which is called Gâşşâ,² [p. 322] and at the break of day he turned to come back, and Pâlôhâ saw the holy man on the other side of the river, and he recognized that it was he; and he saw that when he had drawn near to the Zâb he made the sign of the cross and crossed over upon the top of the water, and he drew near to him and saluted him. And when the old man saw and knew that Pâlôhâ had perceived him care afflicted him, and he was troubled, and he adjured him, saying, "Thou art forbidden by the word of our Lord to make known what thou hast seen until I depart [this] life;" and he left him and came to his cell. And Pâlôhâ, paying no heed to the ban, neither fearing the oaths, related this before the whole brotherhood.

Now when I¹ lived in the service of the monastery I used to pasture a few cattle which we had in the monastery in the woods [which were] in the valley near the cemetery, and I heard from within the thicket the sound of bitter weeping, like that of one fastened in the stocks.² And at the noise of the mournful outcries I went softly into [the thicket] and found Abbâ Joseph sitting on the ground among the grass and plants and flowers—now it was the time of the month of Îyâr—and I saw him gathering dry grasses from among the green grass, which he brought with his hands before his face, and weeping bitterly he said, "The days of man are like the grass, and he groweth up like the herb of the field, which when the wind hath blown over it is not, neither is its place known;"³ and again, "Man is like unto a vapour, and his days pass like a shadow;"⁴ and he laid them down upon the ground. And again he gathered other grasses and after he had weeded out all the old, he passed his hand softly over the new, and embracing them said, "Verily the generations of flesh and blood are like unto the leaves of trees,⁵ some of which fade and fall, and some of which grow up;" and he repeated these [words] with mournful sighs and groans while tears flowed down from his eyes abundantly. [p. 323] And again he took some of the beautiful flowers, and looking at them sweetly he groaned, and said to God, "Glory be to Thee, O Creator of all [things], how beautiful are Thy works."¹ Now I standing silently above him marvelled at the wonderful things that I saw, and how that holy old man was able to weep over such contemptible and despicable matters with so great a weeping which others could not have wept even had they been beaten. And after his great weeping and his bitter outcries, he started up with gratitude to God, and there sprang up gladness within him, and like David, his mouth was filled with laughter, and his tongue with praise,² and he took some of those flowers which were in front of him in his hand, and bringing them near to his nose, he lifted up his voice and sang in metre the whole of the hymn of Hosannas, "The rose, and the lilies, and the blossoms, and the spring flowers are very lovely in their appearance;" and without being perceived, for he would have been angry, I left him and went away. There are many things about him [which I could tell], but I pass over them all that I may not burden this discourse with too much weight, and that it may not become longer than its fellows. Now when this holy man died he was alone in his cell, and he departed this life without a servant, for no man ministered unto him during his illness; but the holy Rabban Peter his fellow-soldier knew of it, but whether by divine revelation, or whether because he went to

in the Monastery of Bêth 'Âbhê.

Permit me to inform thy love, O Mâr 'Abd-Îshô', and every one who shall peruse these lines that I am not to be blamed¹ because I have not been able to write these histories with polished speech and with learned words skilfully strung together. For I have not done it as well as I could have wished, but according to my power and as I was able, and that which [is done] according to [a man's] power is beloved by God and [resteth] upon Him. To God the Cause of all things, the Supporter of all things, and the Administrator of all things, be glory, and honour, and praise, and worship, and thanksgiving, now and always, and for ever and ever, Amen.

Here end the five Books of the triumphs of the holy Fathers.

THE HISTORIES OF RABBAN CYPRIAN AND OF RABBAN GABRIEL
THE HOLY HEAD OF THE MONASTERY WHICH IS IN THE DISTRICT OF BÎRTÂ, IN THE COUNTRY OF MARGÂ, COMPOSED BY THE PIOUS THOMAS.

According to what the holy fathers say, the rational soul possesseth three powers, desire, anger, and thought, and from these, as from fathers and mothers, are produced the other powers. From desire spring chastity, love, and patience; from anger, strength and fortitude, and from thought understanding, wisdom and knowledge. From these, according to what say the holy writers on the ascetic and monastic life, is propagated in the God-loving heart every work upon which as by stories, the spiritual building riseth and with which the mind, which is wise in Divine matters, buildeth up and completeth the whole tower which mounteth up to heaven. Now the labours and habits of life which are wrought by holy men and which have repentance as their aim, namely, fasting, watching, bowing of the whole body and head to the ground, and¹

prayers themselves, are the primary matters and materials for the ascetic life; and services of Psalms, self-denial, tears,¹ contrition, readings of the Scriptures, patience, seriousness, chastity, voluntary poverty, silence, meditation on divine matters, the despising of self, the fleeing away from men, the struggling, and the sitting apart quietly in the cell: [p. 326] these are all the various things which purify the understanding [which] loveth prudence. These, and more than these, needeth the labour of monks which is performed with correct aim and for the sake of the glory of the world which is to come. And the blessed Mark the monk grouped these things under the three comprehensive heads of the ascetic life, namely, "that a man should pray without ceasing; that he should cleanse his thoughts; and that he should endure those things which happen." Wherefore when the soul of him that would be perfect in these things hath entered into them, it hath already become a dwelling-place for the Holy Spirit; and hath trodden the passions under foot; and hath become exalted above the body; and hath yoked² it beneath itself like a chariot; and like a strenuous charioteer it pursueth after the passions and treadeth under foot the desires of the body; and like a fire blazing with the love of our Lord it burneth up all humidity [of the body] which is placed as an obstacle in the burning path of Christ; and it is filled with love towards its neighbour, from which love for God is produced, and concerning which the divine Apostle John saith in his Catholic Epistle, "He that thinketh he

loveth God, but who loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"¹ [Thus] thou seest that love to God is produced by love to man. And [this] soul despiseth the hostile disposition and all the crafty duplicity of the devils which are its enemies, and by the Divine help in which it taketh refuge it cutteth to pieces their snares, and dissipateth their crafts and wiles, and becometh a mansion of Christ, and He, and His Father, and His Spirit come and make their dwelling with it. And it attaineth the heavenly rest and the Sabbath peace in that mystical feast which the tried fathers who have penetrated into the mysteries of the new world have celebrated in the secrecy of their pure minds, [p. 327] by a bond of perfect unity which is joined² to its object and which is superior to this world, and which can never be explained by created beings with a tongue of flesh, and which is filled³ on all sides with understanding which is superior to the learning of books,⁴ and the mind plungeth into the obscure and concealed domain of their dark hiding place, and emergeth into the splendour of their enjoyments and forgetteth the world and everything which is in it. And it happeneth that twice and thrice a day [the mind] is absorbed there without perceiving it, even as it is said concerning every one of the holy men, and according also to what happened to Abbâ Sisoës,⁵ who when his disciple knocked at the anchorite and ascetic, by whose hands the Lord completed a holy monastery in the district of Bîrtâ towards the end of his life, [p. 328] and with him was the holy¹ Abbâ Gabriel who also triumphed in this monastery. But before we involve ourselves in these histories and write down their noble deeds for prudent readers, we will lift ourselves above our narrative a little, and introduce into this history [some] mention of the holy anchorites who lived in this country, by whose rays our part of the world was illumined, and who made the country of Margâ to possess a splendid appearance² [such] as it never possessed before; and they made it the abode of their holiness, and the scene of their labours in the caves, and habitations, and monasteries which they planted therein. I speak³ now concerning the holy Monastery of Rîshâ, in which according to what the historians of times and kings say, seven Bishops lived at the beginning, but in which subsequently many [more] lived; and the Monastery of the holy Mâr Ephraim⁴ the monk, who lived for the whole period of his life in a double⁵ cave, [which was situated] in a place called “Ammîḳê” or “Naḥlâ dhě

⁴ Assemânî has ܡܘܨܡܘܡܐ, but ܡܘܨܡܘܡܐ is a better reading, for Thomas of Margâ means to tell us that the Monastery of Râmâ was a strongly built structure, part dwelling-place, part fortress, and that it was sufficiently strong to withstand the attacks of the Kurds and other predatory tribes.

Now once, when [the sense of] what was right urged me to go round about and to pray in their caves where they had lived, I went into them with great reverence, and I understood the affliction and tribulation of their lives, to which the very places where they lived testify, and I was exceedingly sorry and very much grieved, and at once I blamed the teachers who were found in their days, [teachers who] perhaps had been esteemed worthy to see these men, or to behold their wonderful works, because [the sense of] what was right had not urged and obliged them to set down in writing some matters of the noble acts and deeds of such anchorites as these; for it is more evident than the sun¹ at noon-day that signs, and mighty deeds, and noble acts must have been exhibited by them to the believing men who lived in their days. And when I had returned from there, that is to say from the clefts and holes of the holy men in the rocks above, I went also into the Monastery of the holy Mâr Cyprian the ascetic, which was situated in the vicinity of [the caves of] these holy men, and I enquired also concerning the holy men who were therein, and if they had any histories of them in their possession which I could read, and with which I could satisfy my eager desire [to know] their triumphs. And the brethren who were therein brought out and gave to me some incomplete narratives, in which there were, [p. 331] however, some few materials relating to the triumphs of the mighty deeds of the holy Rabban Cyprian, and of the blessed Gabriel, and of Paul his brother, from which I could learn whence they came, and how and where they became disciples, and how they lived, and in what manner they ended their days. And when I had gone through them, although they were written in a simple manner by men who loved God, I thanked our Lord and offered up grateful thanks for the gift of the zeal of the ascetic brethren who lived in this monastery during the life-time of these fathers, who had not been negligent like the early [writers] and passed over all the noble acts and deeds of these holy men. And I dared—now such boldness as this is praiseworthy, because it stirreth up those who listen to the praise of God—to collect from the materials of their most excellent works a spiritual treatise in writing, upon which the brethren [and] ascetics who are in this monastery may meditate, as well as the priests and believing men who are desirous of hearing about the glorious works of these men who are [now] captains of the hosts of the kingdom of heaven. Now first we will make ready our discourse to speak concerning the thrice blessed and holy Rabban Cyprian the ascetic, and we will set down in writing the blessed things of his victorious deeds before wise and prudent readers and listeners, for he lived a long time before Rabban Gabriel, and he was the origin and father of this holy assembly. We will begin, then, to relate [his] history, and may the Divine grace through his prayers be with us, and may our discourse, through Christ Who strengthened him, be a benefit [to all].

CHAPTER II.

OF THE ORIGIN OF THE BLESSED CYPRIAN, AND OF HIS TRAINING AT SCHOOL, AND OF HIS GOING TO JERUSALEM.

There is in the country of Margâ a district, the name of which is Birtâ,¹ and in this district is a village, days—where he was thoroughly trained in all the glorious doctrine of the Holy Scriptures, and in the books on the dispensation of life, [p. 333] and in expositions of them. And when he arrived at the state of perfect manhood, because he like Samuel, and Jeremiah, and the other holy men, had been set apart aforetime to be a soldier and a member of the household of the heavenly Lordship, and because he had been ordained to be the cause of great benefits at a time when [important] matters began to run their course, He that knoweth hidden things, and things which are about to happen, and things which are afar off, did not fail to give to that blessingworthy person an indication of His providential dispensation that he should become and be called a portion of eternity. And with what result? He inflamed his heart and set on fire his mind with the desire, hotter than fire, of going to Jerusalem to see the holy place where Christ our Lord manifested to mankind His bodily dispensation for the sake of their redemption. And being involved in this thought and determination he prepared to begin the plan of his journey with hot and zealous steps directed thither, and having renounced earthly love, and made himself an alien to the love for parents, and brethren, and human kind, and all his kindred, he laid upon himself the holy Book of the Gospels, and thus like an athlete he began to depart; and he brought his journey to an end in hot haste, letting pass places of tarrying for rest,¹ like a man who hurries home to his father's house and to his family whom he hath not seen¹ for a long time. And when he had arrived in Jerusalem and had worshipped in all the holy places, the place where Christ was baptized in the Jordan,²

² St. Matthew iii. 13—17; St. Mark i. 5—11. Two places for fording the Jordan are mentioned in the Old Testament: one was over against Jericho (Joshua ii. 7; Judges iii. 28), and the other was at Bethabara (St. John i. 28), which is probably to be identified with the modern Maḳṭa' or "place of passage." It is nowhere stated expressly where Christ was baptized, but it is thought by some that His baptism by St. John took place at the upper ford. Tradition proves that from a very early date pilgrims believed that the baptism of Christ took place here, and the existence of the ruins of the Monastery of St. John (Kaṣr el-Yehûdi) which was built over the cave in which St. John is said to have lived, near this spot at a short distance from the river, lends support to the belief. As early as the time of Constantine baptism in the Jordan was considered a blessed thing, and in the 6th century pilgrims crowded thither from all parts; see Robinson, Biblical Researches, vol. iii. p. 353ff.; Reland, Palaestina, pp. 271—279; Socin and Baedeker, Palestine and Syria, p. 266. Antoninus Martyr, who visited Palestine about 570, says:—" venimus in locum, ubi baptizatus est dominus noster. In ipso loco transierunt filii Israel; ibi et filii prophetarum perdidierunt securim et ex ipso loco assumptus est Elias. In ipso loco est mons Hermon modicus, qui legitur in Psalmo." At this spot both banks of the river were paved with marble steps, and a wooden cross rose in the middle of the stream "est crux lignea intus in aqua et gradus descendunt usque ad aquam ex utraque parte marmoris." Antonini Placentini Itinerarium, ed. ¹ It is difficult to understand what Temple Rabban Cyprian can have seen at Jerusalem. The first Temple was built by Solomon (2 Samuel vii. 5 ff.), and all the arrangements were identical with those in the Tabernacle of Moses; the second Temple was built by Zerubbabel when the Jews returned from the Captivity about B. C. 510; and the third and greatest of the Temples was built by Herod and burnt down at the siege of Jerusalem by Titus A. D. 70. Julian the Apostate wished the Jews to return to Jerusalem and tried to rebuild their Temple, and before the end of the Vth century crowds of pilgrims arrived yearly to visit the places made sacred by Christ. Jerusalem suffered greatly at the hands of the Persians A. D. 614 and many of its churches were destroyed; in 637 it was conquered by the Arabs. It is thus clear that very little of any ancient building can have been left in Jerusalem by the time Rabban Cyprian arrived there.

of our nature was completed, his soul rejoiced, and his spirit was satisfied, and he rested from the toil and weariness of his way; and he praised and glorified Him, by trust in Whom he had been anxious to travel and to see the places which the adorable footsteps [had trodden]. From thence he set out to go to Mount Sinai in Arabia, [p. 334] and in this mountain [he went into] the cave¹ in which the blessed Moses had lived, and in which the Lord shewed him the constitution of all this universe, and where he composed the words of the Spirit,² and where also God had spoken with Elijah³ the great Prophet, and he offered up the sacrifice of praise to the Lord like sweet-smelling odours; and our Lord made His light to shine upon the understanding of the holy young man, and He prepared him to journey uprightly along the path in which there is no blame. From thence he directed the course of his journey straight to Alexandria, and from this [city] he went to the Egyptian desert,⁴ where he stayed having endued himself with the venerable garb¹ of the monks in one of the monasteries of the orthodox which were there, and having laboured in the service of the community according to the canon of the fathers, and having lived in that monastery a considerable time, the chosen vessel deemed that henceforth he might become an anchorite.

CHAPTER III.

OF THE DEPARTURE OF THE HOLY CYPRIAN FROM THE DESERT TO AN ISLAND OF GREECE.

Now the holy Cyprian [p. 335] heard of a solitary island in the territory of the Greeks in which palms and fruits for food were found, and although there might be men living there he would have no need for the services of man; and he persuaded certain traders of the sea, and they carried him in their ship and brought him thither. And when he had gone into the interior he praised God, the Lord of all, who had prepared that place for him, and he rejoiced in it and loved it, and it seemed to him as if he were in the Paradise of Eden. And thus he took advantage of tranquil solitude to fast, and also² to pray and to sing Psalms, and from these [arose] prayer and supplication, which [lasted] day and night, to Him Who loved and Who walked [over] sea and land to fulfil His will in the renunciation¹ of every thing. Now he tarried there a long time without the knowledge of [any] man, delighting in the desert and training himself in all the most severe and minute details and particulars of the ascetic² life, at the same time sparingly sustaining his life with dates and vegetables and herbs which he took from the earth. How many were the fierce strifes and afflictions which this valiant athlete endured there from the passions of the body and the wickedness of obstinate devils it is not for us to write; but those who have occupied themselves for a long time with the affairs of the solitary life and with the life of an anchorite [know] how hard it is to lead that life, and how difficult, and what fierce enemies attack the wretched monk, and how he eateth [his bread] day and night with the tears of his eyes, and with bitterness. As for consolation it is far from him; as for wars, they surround him on all sides; and helpers he has none. So then, considering contests and strifes of absolute necessity he was entirely collected in his mind, and he was afraid lest the thought which awoke in him irritatingly would put an end to his contemplation, and would destroy in the twinkling of an eye all his life-long labour; [p. 336] for, as Paul saith, his contest “was not against flesh and blood, but with principalities and powers, and against the rulers of darkness of this world, and against evil spirits under the heavens”.¹ His labour was [his] furnace, that [he might go forth] like gold which is tried and tested by the fire. There in the desert he was victorious, and he was profited by afflictions by which as the body melted away and gradually disappeared, the soul shone and became radiant to meet the riches of glorious things after its sufferings and afflictions; for in proportion as the soul entereth into sublime things and becometh exalted, so do its fierce enemies attack it. So then [we cannot] relate concerning the strifes of this mighty man of strength, for they are secret and hidden from us.

² The MSS. have ܘܫܘܒܘܢ ܕܡܘܨܝܘܢ, but we should have expected ܘܫܘܒܘܢ ܕܡܘܨܝܘܢ “its twinings” (or twistings, intricacies, ramifications). For examples of the use of this word compare ܘܫܘܒܘܢ ܕܡܘܨܝܘܢ Aphraates, ed. Wright, p. 137, l. 19; ܘܫܘܒܘܢ ܕܡܘܨܝܘܢ “atra erat nox”, Sancti Ephraem Syri, ed. Lamy tom. i. p. 437, l. 10; ܘܫܘܒܘܢ ܕܡܘܨܝܘܢ Wright, Apocryphal Acts, vol. i. p. 183, l. 6; ܘܫܘܒܘܢ ܕܡܘܨܝܘܢ Land, Anecdota, tom. ii. p. 216, l. 28; and سلالة Dozy, Supplément, tom. i. p. 670.

Now after he had tarried there for the space of many years he became known even unto the traders in this wise: it came to pass that they once touched that island to brace up their ship which had been greatly shaken by the violence of the waves, and certain of the crew wandered about hither and thither in the island. And they had heard about him from those who had brought him over there when he first came to that island, and when they saw from a distance the palm trees of his garden they knew that the man of God dwelt there. And they went, and found him, and drew near to him, and were blessed by the holy man whom they sought, and they left with him some of their provisions, and received a blessing from him and departed. And this was the cause of his being perceived there by men and becoming well known. And after his strugglings and strivings which [took place] there our Lord made him to flourish in all the excellence of a perfect ascetic life, and not only were healed those who came to him, but even those who were afar off, and who could not see him, when they called upon the name of the God of Cyprian the anchorite, [p. 337] speedily received healing of their sicknesses. And likewise also the seamen who went down into the sea, when they were in trouble through the raging of the sea, [called upon] the name of the holy man, and the waves became quiet by his prayer, and the billows of the sea subsided. Now when he had lived full forty years in that desert, and had gathered to himself riches of which he could not be despoiled, and had laid up all his treasure in heaven above, according to the Redeeming¹ word, and had received from the Lord all things which could perfect His will, and had become instead of a creature of soul and body, a man of the Spirit, the holy angel of the Lord appeared to him in a vision, [and told him] to return without delay to the country of Margâ, and to build a monastery for ascetics on the border of his village, and to become a spiritual father and a director of solitaries. Now Divine Goodness is accustomed to work in this [manner], even as it did in the case of Moses the Great (whom after he had been the shepherd of a dumb flock for forty years,² it raised up to lead and direct the thousands and ten thousands of Israel), and many others; for they were first of all trained and exercised in the solitude of the desert and mountains, and were afterwards appointed by God and brought to rule over those who led the life of solitaries, and over the Church.

CHAPTER IV.

OF THE COMING OF RABBAN CYPRIAN TO THIS COUNTRY OF MARGÂ, AND OF HOW HE WAS REVEALED AND BECAME KNOWN IN THIS PLACE.

Now this holy man, [p. 338] having received from the Lord this permission, changed the place in which he had lived for forty years pleasing God, as was right, and crossed the sea, and returned to this country. And it happened before his coming here that the village of Bêth Magûshê,¹ which was the home of his parents, had been laid waste, and so, Divine Grace leading him, he came and dwelt in the wood which is below the monastery [which he afterwards built]. Now aforetime the place was such that fierce wild animals dwelt therein, and even with the blessed man Cyprian, according to what is written concerning him, during the whole of the time in which he lived in the wood without any man being aware of his presence, there lived two lions, which not only did not do him harm, but stood tranquilly before him like innocent lambs.² His food was

Go back to your village, and behold a stag will meet you, take him and slay him, and so depart to your houses;" then they went forth from him quickly that they might inform their fathers concerning him. Now when they had gone away about a stone's throw, from that part of the wood¹ [where] the old man [was] they found the stag of which he had spoken to them caught by his horns in the branches of the forest, and they took him and slew him, and went in to their village, and they quickly informed the people thereof concerning that old man. Then the whole village came out, and ran swiftly to the old man that they might see and become acquainted with the anchorite who had been sent to help them; the wise physician who was able to heal their sicknesses without payment; the merchant who was laden with much riches which he might spend for their benefit; the spiritual father who was able, like the son of 'Amram,² to stand before the breaches of those who afflicted them; and the man who became altogether like Paul;³ that they might see John in the Jordan, and hear his voice encouraging sinners to repentance;⁴ [and] Elijah the prophet who would burn up and destroy the evil company⁵ of heretics as he burned up the children of Baal.¹ And when they had come to him, and had gone in and seen this holy old man they bowed themselves down to the ground before the ascetic and recluse, and they drew near [to him] and kissed the old rags of his clothing. [p. 340] Now the blessed man perceived no one of them, for he remained before them lying on his face with his eyes streaming with tears, and the man who had led the life of an anchorite for forty years was not able to look boldly upon [any] man in that gathering. And while they were waiting and entreating him that he would hold them to be worthy of the blessings of his prayers, he answered and said to them, "Rise up now, my children, and go to your homes, for behold the head and governor of the churches of this country will come to your village this evening, and as for me I shall remain here to-morrow and the day following;" and he blessed them and said farewell to them. Thus they left him, and departed from him, and according to the words of our master, "[he will come] at the eventide of this day", there came to them the pious and holy Metropolitan of the country, as he was going round visiting his flocks and nourishing the people of his pasture, according to our Lord's command to him.² And when they were gathered together to that holy head, they related to him concerning the manifestation of that mighty man of God, and at the same time concerning his asceticism and his venerable appearance, and concerning the self-abnegation and voluntary poverty which they had seen in him, and how he had informed them, saying that “at the eventide of this day the coming of thy holiness would take place.” And when the holy father had heard these things, he went down to the holy man in the morning of the morrow with a great assembly of priests and teachers and scholars of the school of Şâwrâ; and when the blessed old man perceived that it was the Head of the Church who had come to him, he rose up without delay and went forth to meet him. And the holy Bishop saw him from afar, bent, and bowed, and supporting himself on a small staff,¹ and bowing, and falling down, and rising up, and he hastened towards him [p. 341] and fell upon his face before the feet of the Metropolitan. And the holy Bishop marvelled greatly at the unexampled sight which he saw in the blessed man, for by reason of the long endured burden of his labours he appeared to be like unto a spectre.³ Then the holy old man wept, and said to the Bishop, “Why did I not come to thee, like a servant to the feet of his lord, instead of thy coming to me, O holy father, [seeing that] I am a sinner [who is bound] to bow down to thy greatness?” (Hail to the humility which is so superior! Hail to mind [which] beareth wisdom!)⁴ “For [I] know that honour is due to the priesthood, and for this reason I have come with tears to meet him to whom the ministry of the priesthood hath been entrusted, and not like a man who hath been reared in a desert country, and who is not acquainted with the estimation in which the fathers are held, and who hath in his hole in the rock become neglectful and remiss, and who considereth the honouring of that man not to be among things which are necessities." And when both of these holy men had been blessed by each other Mār Bishop asked the blessed man by degrees to tell him about the manner of his coming here, and from what place he made his way to us; and having informed him about lesser matters he omitted [to speak] of great matters. Then the Bishop rose up and took the old man by his hand and led him round this place where a temple and monastery should be, and in the words of the Lord he said to him, "This is thy portion,¹ build, finish, receive the brethren, and teach disciples, and may the Lord be pleased by thy labour, and by all the course which thou runnest in His commands. For thou shalt increase and become abundant, and thy seed shall inherit the lands which are round about thee, and with the hosts of ascetics which thou shalt beget shalt thou meet the face of the Judge on the day of His coming;" and he marked out for him the dimensions of the temple and of the sanctuary,² and he departed from him to [continue] his visitation.

OF THE BUILDING OF THIS HOLY MONASTERY BY THE HANDS OF THE BLESSED MAN.

Then the believing men from these and many other villages came with all solicitude to the blessed man to build the temple and the buildings for the community,¹ and in a few days the building received conclusion. And there were gathered together to Rabban an assembly of ascetic brethren, fifty men who were proved by their wonderful works, and who were stamped with the likeness of their spiritual father; but the wax² did not receive the impressions of the gems of the ring, even although they inscribed upon them the likenesses of the holy Cyprian, until there lived among them ascetics who had wrought holy and mighty deeds in this world. And our Lord sustained [them], and provided abundantly all things which were necessary for their use, and little by little the belief of our Lord was fully spread abroad by them, and the renown of the congregation of the holy man was carried into every place; and [one] might see that through the prayers of this holy man, this congregation [was] the fountain of all help which flowed into all parts [of the country]. Now Rabban lived here, from his coming to the day of his death, twenty years, more or less. And the blessed man became old and gray, and reached a prolonged old age, and his limbs became infirm by reason of the asceticism of those years which had passed over him, for he had lived forty years in that island, and it is well known that he lived [there] upon the meagre fare of green herbs and of the fruit of palms, and [during] the twenty [years] which he lived in this monastery he supported his life with dry bread only; [p. 343] for one of the monks who served in the monastery used to bring to him every evening a piece of ordinary bread, and a draught of common water only. And once when the brethren urged him to take part with them in a meal of cooked food,¹ and he did what they wished, that food became the cause of an illness, for he was not accustomed to [eat] such food as that, and by reason of feebleness in this respect his illness increased, and the end of his term of years arrived, and the athlete of Christ, who had borne the burden of the day and its heat from the morning of youth to the evening of old age in the service of His vineyard, drew near to rest from his labour; and the conclusion of the end of the days of this strenuous worker of the house of our Lord took place with sweaty labours dripping with the sweat of the new life. He received revelations from his Lord, and he wrought among us the mighty deeds and miracles of the Prophets and Apostles, concerning which, selecting certain parts from their whole [mass], it is time for us to narrate, and thus the course of our history draweth towards the end of the contest of our holy father; and it will be possible for us by means of the small portion which is

DEEDS WHICH THE BLESSED CYPRIAN WROUGHT.

The first of the wonders which the blessed Cyprian wrought in our country is the following, [p. 344] and the village in which the working of mighty deeds began was that which first of all perceived his manifestation. Now it came to pass that while two young men from Nîrâm, a village of the Shepherds, were tending their cattle in the fields, it fell out that they were afflicted by devils in one day; but when their parents had brought them to Rabban, the power of the Evil One departed from them straightway, and they ended their lives in freedom [from him].

And while a certain man was passing at night along the road by the side of a fire temple of the Magians which had been a ruin for some time, devils sprang out upon him in the form of black ravens, and they entered into him and convulsed him; and since his kinsfolk and relations had heard concerning the wonders which had been wrought by the hands of this our Elisha, they led him in bonds to bring him to him. And when they had crossed the river Hâzer to come to this monastery, those devils answered and said to them, "If ye are going to that impostor Cyprian, we are going to remain here;" so they departed from the man and left him. But they nevertheless brought him to Rabban, and he commanded him not to deprive himself of the attendance at Church, and the receiving of the Holy Mysteries, [saying], "the devils shall not be able to draw nigh to thee again;" and the man undertook [to do this], and departed in joy.

And on another occasion they brought to him from the village of Bêth Kaddîshê, a woman bound with cord, and with her garments rent by reason of the violence of the struggling of a devil [with her]; but when they had brought her and a Hênânâ to Rabban,¹

have the horn¹ [of oil] carefully placed in the κόρυμβον²— and when he had anointed the whole body of the boy, he stepped back from him about ten paces, and calling the boy by his name, said, “Rise up, and come to me,” and at the word the boy rose up readily and went to Rabban. Then Rabban laid his hand upon his head, and blessed him, and his father took him and went to his house rejoicing, and every one marvelled and praised God.

And about that time a pestilence fell upon the camels in the country of Bêth Garmai. And the believing men sent to him and asked him to pray for them, and as soon as their messenger had gone into the monastery on that very day the pestilence ceased from their camels; and having received a Ḥĕnânâ and returned, they asked him concerning the day on which he had seen Rabban, and they knew that it was at that hour that God had manifested His help to them; and they praised and glorified God for the power which the prayer of the holy man possessed, in that while he himself was in the country of Margâ, his prayer was doing battle with the pestilence³ in Bêth Garmai.

One day they brought a boy to him from Bîrtâ, a village of Rûstâkâ, with his face turned behind him by the agency of Satan; and when they had brought him in to Rabban, he received healing by the holy right hand of this our father, and he set his face straight, and he became as he was in former times.

Once there came to Rabban a man from the country of Bêth Bëghâsh,¹ whose name [was] Yahbh Mâran, [p. 346] who although he had lived with his wife for many years had not become the father of children, and he entreated Rabban that he would consider him worthy of the help of his prayer. And Rabban made the sign of the Cross over him with a *hênânâ*² three times, and having dismissed him to his journey with prayer he departed to his [own] country, and there were born to him two sons and one daughter.

And they brought to him from Şëyân, a village of heretics, a woman whose two legs were paralysed, and after she had continued in the monastery two days, lying in the chapel, our Lord gave her healing by the prayers of the holy man.

And again they brought to him from the province of Gârîn³ a woman who was blind in both eyes—now this woman belonged to a noble family of rich people, and she was exceedingly beautiful in appearance—and by the prayers of the holy man she also received a complete cure in the appearance and beauty of both her eyes, and every man praised and glorified God when they saw the help which that woman had obtained.

[One] night a devil beat a youth from Berbëli⁴ severely, and made him foam at the mouth, and on the morrow in the morning his parents carried him and brought him

[to the holy man]. And when they had taken him in to Rabban, he sealed him with the sign of the Cross, and rebuked the devil according to the word of our Lord,¹ and all the brethren being gathered together before him, he went forth from his mouth like a carrion crow and flew away and departed; and that boy received healing and became as he was aforetime.

And they brought to him from Nâhêrmeshi² a woman who was persecuted by a wicked devil, and by the prayer of this holy man, the power of our Lord freed her also from the conflict with that devil.

And a certain man from Şeyân brought to Rabban his only son who was smitten with a putrid sore, [p. 347] and Rabban commanded him to go down to the river³ which ran under his cell and to bathe, and by this [means] he sent away [from him] the whole garment of that evil sore; and being healed his father took him with joy and praise of God, and departed to his village.

Once a man from the village of Bêth Talai, who believed in God and loved Him wholly, fell into a severe illness, and by reason of its violence his soul was well nigh departing [from him], and like Hezekiah⁴ he sent to this our Isaiah [asking] that he would visit him with his prayer. And when the youth had gone forth from him to come to the monastery, that believing man saw the angel of the Lord standing above him in the form of Rabban as if he were offering up prayer on his behalf, and he was healed completely, and he sat up in his bed, and he praised and glorified God; and by reason of the sound of his praise the people of his house were disturbed, and they went in and saw [him] sitting on [his] bed praising God, and he stood up forthwith and walked. And when the youth came to Rabban he informed him that he that had sent him was made whole; and those and such-like wonders were wrought by this holy man.

Once Satan appeared to a man by night in the form of a mighty man, and as he neither distinguished the vision nor the strange power, when Satan called him by his name, the man answered him readily and as he spoke Satan entered into him and tortured him. And his kinsfolk and relatives brought him to Rabban, and by the holy oil, and the mediation of his right hand, and by proclaiming over him [the name] of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, he received healing and remained whole all his days.

And they brought to Rabban from the village of Shamrakh a man who was vexed by Satan [p. 348] and he lacerated all his body with bites; he also was quickly made whole by the prayers of Rabban, and returned to his house rejoicing and praising God.

And a certain man had a plot¹ of land which was sown with beans,² and when the fruit was in the pod,³

the worm fell upon all the pods, and tore them to pieces mercilessly; and when he had brought some of the pods and shewed [them] to Rabban, Rabban gave him some water in which the cross which [he wore] upon him had been washed, and commanded him to sprinkle it over all his plot of land, and straightway the plague ceased, and the praise of God increased through him and flourished.

And again, a certain man had large flocks of sheep, upon which there once fell a pestilence, and many of the sheep perished. And the man came to this holy old man and entreated him to pray against that affliction, and on the day when he returned from us, and had distributed the hĕnânâ over his flock, by the help of our Lord the pestilence ceased.

And when they had brought to this servant of Jesus the God of all, a woman whose blood had flowed from her for a long time, and she was nigh unto death, she was healed by the prayer of this blessed old man like the woman whom Jesus healed.¹

who had not yet taken upon themselves the bridle of the worship of God the Life of the worlds, but according to the custom of their parents they worshipped fire and the heavenly bodies. And when these men saw the mighty deeds and signs which were wrought by the mediation of this wonderful man, [p. 349] they were overcome [by] a noble-minded victory, and they spat upon the object of their worship, and despised the impure doctrine of Magianism, and came to this light of Christianity, and entreated him that through him they might become members of the household for the worship of his God, for, said they to him, "The God who is worshipped by thee, O our father, is the true God, and we will be His servants and adorers as long as He permitteth us to live in this world, and Magianism is to be denied, together with all its unclean and polluted muttered prayers.¹ Then he with great joy shewed and made clear before them all the glory of Christianity, and of the living doctrine of the Gospel of Christ our Lord and of those good things which are above [this] world, and which are laid up for holy Christians in the world which is to come, and how in all generations holy men have pleased God the Creator and Maker of all created things, and of God the Cause of everything which exists and is made. And he commanded and made ready everything which was necessary for the Mysteries² of holy baptism, and according to the order of the service of the Holy Church he baptized them with everything,¹ and lay hold upon that which is good, and flee from every evil thing." And the Magians hearkened unto him graciously and simply, and undertook [to do] those things which were said by him to them, and they were mingled among the Catholic Church; and they were changed from their former manner of life of marrying their mothers, and sisters, and daughters, and they acted according to the rule of life which Rabban taught them. And they brought an enlightened and learned man, and he taught them the psalms, and hymns, and holy customs, and observances; and thus they were made perfect holily in the new man which they had put on.

And a certain Persian woman having been made by devils their abode, the poor creature was grievously vexed by them, and she used to come against every one who passed near unto her with foul abuse and stone-throwing; and her kinsfolk having brought her to Rabban, she tarried in the martyrrium the whole night, and with the dawn our Lord gave to her freedom from the subjection to the devils. And after she had been made whole she related to her neighbours, saying, "An old man came to me in the night, and he laid hold of those black beings² which clave to me, [p. 351] and he smote them, and with adjurations forbade them to come near to me again, and they fled and they have not [come] again"; and thus being made whole she returned to her house.

And again, a certain thief once came in the night

brought it into his house all his children were vexed by a devil. And when he saw this he went back to the monastery, [having] the veil with him, and he bowed down before Rabban, and confessed his sin, and Rabban gave him a hĕnânâ and commanded him to give it to his children to drink, [mixed] with water; and when he had done this they straightway received healing.

On another day a certain heathen went into the garden of the monastery, [p. 352] wishing to gather figs, and the Lord smote him with the sickness of blindness, and he remained the whole night sitting on the wall. And when it had dawned and the monks who served in the monastery came and found him, he confessed the sin which he had committed, and they took him in to Rabban who passed his hand over his eyes, and he received perfect healing and undertook never to do the like again.

Now when Satan, the father of lies, who from the beginning fought with our parents in Eden¹ and who hath in all generations inflicted injury upon our race in many things—and he it is who hath sown bitter tares among the chosen wheat of the congregations of the Cross—saw that the monastery of the triumphant man was adorned with every kind of virtue and that its monks performed their duties and observed with diligent care the stated seasons of prayer, and that they completed with joy all the singing of the Psalms, and the praise of Christ which was formed in the mouth of those who daily went in and came out² [of it], he wished to make those ascetic brethren to cease from service of the spirit, through the service of the table, and to pour into and to fill their cells with the votive¹ offerings of meat and drink of the will of Satan, and [to occupy them] with services for the villagers of the country round about and for people of all ranks in the world whom he invited and brought to this poor monastery, instead of the standing up in service before God.² And he worked upon a certain erring monk who [belonged] to the corrupt confession of the followers of Severus of Antioch,³ and he brought with him some rancid⁴ oil, and he came to this monastery, forsooth,

² Thomas means to say that as the fame of the Abbot Cyprian spread abroad in the countries round about people of all ranks flocked to his monastery, and that they either made offerings in money, or in kind, to it, or gave gratuities to the monks to conduct services and prayers on their behalf. The offerings in kind were eaten at a common table by monks and visitors, and the gifts in money enabled them to indulge in many of the comforts of life. In a short time the monks lost their keen appreciation of the pleasures of the ascetic life and grew to love the services of Saints' days and holidays, and Satan was enabled to work his will upon them. At this time the Abbot by means of a flask of bad oil, which was introduced into the monastery by a heretic, showed them that this perpetual and wearisome crowd of visitors was as injurious to their spiritual life as was bad oil if used to anoint children and sick people before baptism, and that the odour of such visits was symbolically as the smell of bad oil; he caused the flask of bad oil to be burned, and thus symbolically burned up the disease which was eating away the spiritual life of the ascetics.

to pray. And he tarried here the night, and in the morning he took out from his bosom a little horn of that abominable oil, and gave it to the steward, saying, "Keep this prayer¹ oil for me until I come back from a journey which I must needs make"; now the brother in his simplicity took the oil without asking any questions, [p. 353] and hid it in one of the windows of the monastery,² until its owner should come and take it. And what did Satan our adversary do? As long as that stinking oil remained here, he stirred up [the people of] every country and district to come and pray in the monastery of Rabban Cyprian, and [they came] not only [from] Margâ, which was near, but from Bêth Nûhdêrân,³ and there came Arabs, and Ninevites, people of Adiabene, and the people of Bêth Garmai, Bêth Bêghâsh, Dâsen, and the field of Hêptôn.⁴ And he caught and brought hither such crowds upon crowds of people that the monastery and the temple and the cells of the brethren could not hold the multitudes that were going and coming, and that belonged to the congregations which established the will of Satan. And when Rabban, the holy Mâr Cyprian, saw this thing which was not according to custom, he called to the brethren and said to them, "O my sons, the tumult of all this changing multitude is very foreign, in my opinion [to our life]. Who am I, and what is my righteousness, that my fame hath stirred up all countries to weary us? Shew me if ye have wrought any thing contrary to [our rules], or if there is among you a man who hath associated himself with heretics and hath learned any thing from them; for I know that God is not the cause of all these assemblies." Then the brother who had received the oil from the heretic came and fell down before Rabban, and he answered and said to him, "Master, forgive me, for I have committed sin unwittingly. A certain monk of the followers of Severus of Antioch gave me this vessel of oil,¹ and he said to me, 'Keep it until I return from the journey which I must make'; but what was the object of it I knew not." And when Rabban saw it, he smelled from it the rancid smell of the wicked, and he knew that it was the cause of this damned weariness; and he commanded, and the furnace was made hot, and he threw it into the fire together with the vessel [that contained it]. Thus was extinguished the flame of that spiritual sickness, [p. 354] and those people who were on the roads turned back, and those who were making preparations in their houses to come left off making ready, and we received the grace of God that the heretical doctrine of the Evil One was corrected by the mediation of our holy father.

And a certain woman from Şâwrâ had a daughter who was one day vexed by Satan, and she brought her to this driver away of devils. And when she had laid her at the feet of his holiness, he stood up and prayed over her, and we were all looking on, and wasps¹ vicious as those excited by smoke came forth from her mouth, and thus our Lord speedily gave her healing; and the woman took her daughter and went out from before him confessing and glorifying God with us. But why should we strive as if, forsooth, we were able to relate [all] the wonders of this holy man? For who knoweth the mighty deeds which he wrought in that island, and in the deserts of Egypt and Scete, where he lived for forty years? The things which he wrought here he wrought secretly, and we have written down a few of the many things which he did, [being] those which were wrought before us, but we have omitted [to notice] the rest because of their great number.

CHAPTER VII.

OF THE END OF THE COURSE OF THE BLESSED MAN, AND OF HIS EXHORTATIONS TO HIS CHILDREN IN THE HOUR OF HIS DEATH.

Let us now shew forth the crowning of the course of this warrior, and how he who for sixty years had not rested, either day or night, from his ardent course towards his Lord, [p. 355] rested from the trouble of his wandering in strange lands. Now after he had completed twenty years of life here, and after he had made his monastery to flourish with many brethren, and with the books of the Holy Scriptures, and with readers and ascetics, like the other monasteries of the holy men his contemporaries, the day drew nigh and arrived in which he should rest from his labour, and should finish his contest in glorious perfectness. And he knew and felt that the hour of his departure had arrived, and he called to his holy sons, and spake to them, saying, "Now, my sons, abide in peace, for my time is come, and the moment of the end in which I shall go the way of my fathers, and along the road of all the race of Adam, hath drawn nigh. Take good heed, my sons, to yourselves, and to all the doctrine which ye have received from me; be not neglectful of the seasons of prayer, nor of sitting [in meditation] in your cells, nor of penitential bowings and prostrations to the ground which I have committed to you, and in token of regret for the worldliness of your lives, commanded you to perform. Let not your lives pass away in idleness, for the hour of death is hidden from us, and when it hath come [to you] ye will repent of your days which [ye have passed] in slothfulness. With all your might take good heed that ye be not mingled with profane heretics, and let your souls abominate all their doctrine, for they are enemies of your manner of life, and of your peace of mind, like Satan who is in them. My sons, enter not into their monasteries, and mingle not with the pure gold of your belief the abominable brass of their subtilities; for they are cut off from belief, and are empty of hope, and that their work is Satanic the polluted oil which [we burned] a short time ago [and which] gathered all countries against us, will teach. Take heed moreover, my beloved, unto the love of those who are in the world and exchange not the love of your Lord [p. 356] for the love which ye once denied before many. Possess neither gold, nor silver, nor clothes more than ye need, that ye fall not, like Gehazi,¹ from the household of our Lord; for just as our Lord is greater than Elisha, so also is the punishment of those who tread His commandments under foot greater; ye shall give answer to our Lord on the Day of Judgment if ye transgress one of these commandments." And when he had admonished and exhorted them, he commanded them and they came near before him, and he kissed each one of them, and said farewell to them; and all the brethren wept with a great weeping at the parting of the righteous man from them. And when he had saluted them, he bowed on the top of his staff, like Jacob,² and prayed, and he blessed the Church and her children, and pastors, and masters, and kings, and governors; and he made the sign of the holy Cross over his monastery, and thus with his mouth full of the glory of God, and his tongue [of] praise,³ he stretched out his legs without sickness and without suffering, and he opened his holy mouth and delivered up his spirit in peace. And as he was gentle and gracious in his life, and never chid any man or behaved harshly [to him], so let him sleep happily until the Voice which shall raise him up alive calleth him, and lifteth him up to heaven with all his holy fellow-labourers. And [the people of] all the village, together with the teachers, and scholars, and priests, and deacons were assembled with the congregation of his sons, and they celebrated the day of his commemoration with the praises and canons according to custom, day and night, and he was laid in the martyrium with the honour which befitted his holiness; and on the following day they kept a vigil for him a second time that he might be an intercessor with his followers¹ for them on the day when he shall be paid the wages of his trials and troubles, and that they might sit down happily at the feast of the kingdom above. Amen.

Now after the death of that holy chief our Lord wrought a miracle at his grave, [p. 357] the [like of] which had never been worked by him during his life, that it might be known unto all men that he was alive and with our Lord, and that now he was more near to Him, and that he had obtained freedom of speech before Him. A certain believing woman from the village of Bêth Mârûth, who during the lifetime of Rabban had had experience of the signs [which he worked], had a son, who had been given to her by the prayer of Rabban through a ḥěnânâ which she had received from him; and this son contracted a serious disease, and it waxed grievously sore in him. Now when his mother understood that he was a dead man, for he was nigh unto death, that believing woman, who is worthy of being remembered for good, was, in her faith, like unto the Shunammite² woman of Elisha, and she said to her husband, "Rise up, and make ready a she-ass for me, that it may go with my son to my Elisha, Mâr Cyprian,

the ascetic, the spiritual father of my son". And although every man advised her [saying], "Give up this idea, for when the boy's body is shaken by the motion¹ of the ass, he will die immediately", she was not at all persuaded, but said, "If he die there I will bury him, and if he is made whole it will be the power of God that, by the prayer of the holy man, shall bestow healing upon my son". And having set herself and her son upon the she-ass, she commanded her servant to lead on quickly, and when she had come a distance of three farsah the soul of the lad departed from him. And she alighted from the ass, and she bandaged(?)² him, and wrapped him round, being strong in her faith. And she came to this monastery and went into the martyrrium, and laid him before the grave of Rabban [p. 358], and she gave herself to prayer like the holy woman Hannah,³ the mother of Samuel, and in a voice which could be heard she spake mournfully, so that every one round about her wept, saying, "O Mâr Cyprian, the servant of God, behold the loan which thou didst grant to me during thy lifetime thou hast taken back in thy death. I did not ask of thee a soulless corpse, neither did I seek to suffer the pangs of childbirth,⁴ and to bring up a child if all my care and lullabies were to be in vain. Take pity upon that belief which hath taken refuge in thee now that thou art dead as when thou wast alive, and let not the bosom of thy woman disciple be deprived of the child which thou hast placed therein. Entreat now thy Lord, like Elisha, and let Him give back to me the blessing which I have plucked from the tree of the house of Adam by thy prayer; and as concerning Elisha also it is written that a dead man came to life again [through touching] his dead body,¹ even so let the breath of life blow into the son of thy handmaid by the shrine of thy glorious body, for when a servant is near unto his master he hath the greater freedom of speech. Have pity upon the woman who with lamentations goeth round about thy holy tomb, and I will make it a condition with thy Lord that he shall minister in thy monastery all the days of his life, and that like Samuel the son of Hannah he shall be a man set apart to the Lord, and shall be dedicated [to God] all his days. O God of Mâr Cyprian, let the request of thy handmaid enter in before Thee, although I am unworthy [of it], and let Thy holy man Cyprian be [my] advocate before Thee." Then God the merciful One Who spake "Let light shine out of darkness",² and "Everything is possible to him that believeth",³ and "Everything which ye shall ask in prayer, if ye believe, ye shall receive",⁴ especially wishing to glorify the son of His household in his death more than in his life, made the soul of the boy to return to its body, [p. 359] and he cried out according to [his] custom. Now we were in the temple [occupied] in the service of Psalms for the night, and the woman was in the martyrrium; and when the mother saw that [her] boy moved she glorified God with a loud voice, and by her voice we perceived that the boy had come to life. And we also went into the martyrium,¹ and saw him sitting before his mother as in former times; and with the life which was restored to him he received a complete cure. And every man praised God and marvelled, and the woman took her son and went to her village, and related to the believers everything which had taken place; and because of this thing the praise of our Lord was proclaimed in all the country. And that believing woman, like Hannah, performed her vow, and she set him apart [to the Lord] even as she had vowed; and when the boy had grown up and had arrived at years of discretion, she brought him to the monastery and left him and went away. And he became a disciple and [afterwards] an ascetic, and every year² she came to see him, and brought to him clothes even as Hannah did for Samuel. And he became a perfect example of a solitary brother, and completed his life in this monastery according to the will of God, the Lord of all, to Whom be praise, and honour, and worship, and dominion, and exaltation; and by the prayers of the holy Mâr Cyprian may His grace and mercy [be] upon our assembly, now and always, and for ever and ever, Amen.

Here endeth the history of the blessed Rabban Mâr Cyprian, the priest and ascetic, the founder of the holy monastery in the province of Bîrtâ.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE HISTORY OF THE WONDERFUL ACTS OF THE MIGHTY
MAN RABBAN GABRIEL, THE ASCETIC IN VERY TRUTH, AND THE HEAD OF THE MONASTERY OF THE HOLY MÂR CYPRIAN.

THE AUTHOR'S APOLOGY TO THE READER.

Now therefore we have the intention of writing concerning that marvellous man among the ascetics who flourished in the later times, the blessed Rabban Gabriel, the man who penetrated the mysteries of Christ, by whose hands our Lord wrought the signs of the Prophets and Apostles, and of weaving with my feeble speech the crown of his strife, from the materials which have been written down by early [writers] concerning his noble acts, and from those things which I have heard repeated about him, some by the monks who saw him whom I have met, and some from the priests and believing men of the country. And I will lay it upon the table of the hearing of those who love the histories of holy men, adding also at the same time, according to the materials which I have found with his history, the narrative of the gentle-minded Rabban Paul, his brother, whose memorial is among the righteous, upon the help of whose prayers I rely. And as far as my ignorance will allow I hope to bring conviction to my hearers of the befitting rank¹ of the excellence of these divine men, and I entreat every one who is about to read through these histories, not to consider me blameworthy as if I had drawn nigh presumptuously to set down in writing their glorious deeds; for our Lord knoweth that I have not drawn near to write down their histories for the sake of profane advantages or lying fame. [p. 361] For what profit can the ignorant man who relieth upon his own wisdom inherit from dull and senseless words? Or what benefit can the fool gain, who although he cannot heal himself, is nevertheless occupied with the praise of others? And I was seized with jealousy that the congregation, and the place where their bodies rest should not be deprived of the stories of their holiness, for a paternal inheritance is beloved by children, and the study of the histories of their lives is a blessed thing for the heirs of the fathers. And, moreover, it is not meet that the marvellous fame of the mighty deeds of men, who in their holiness fall short in no way of the early saints, should not be proclaimed and spoken of in the world. So then it becometh the wise and understanding reader to drive out all blame of my shortcomings from his mind, for just as I have drawn near to set down in writing the memorials [of holy men] for the benefit of the community, so also is it incumbent upon him to praise and magnify these things which are written down. And although [my] discourse be weak and halting, let him have regard of the fruit which it beareth, and let him gather roses from thorns, and flowers from brambles, leaving the thorns and brambles behind in their commonness to become food for fire and pasturage for wild animals.

OF THE ORIGIN OF THESE HOLY MEN [RABBAN GABRIEL AND RABBAN PAUL].

In the country of Bêth Garmai there was a village called Lûz,¹ and in it there was a certain house of believers renowned for [their] fear of God, [p. 362] among whom was a believing man whose good works were well attested. For this man our Lord prepared a good wife, as it is written in Wisdom,² "A good wife shall be given to the man that feareth God because of his good works", and he begot by her two sons; the name of the one was Paul, and of the other Gabriel. And while they were young children their father departed from [this] temporary life to that of eternity, and his true faith clave to him by the light of his works; and the house remaining to their mother, this woman occupied herself in the reading of the Holy Scriptures and in fasting and prayer, and she gave alms³ and oblations abundantly to the poor and afflicted. Now when the two boys had grown up and they had determinedly set themselves apart to observe the things which were seemly and which their Creator had placed in the nature of the family of Adam, that believing and holy woman took them, and gave herself to exile for God's sake, holding on to the hands of her sons, and relying upon the heavenly hope, and going along the paths which [lead] towards this land. When God, Who knoweth every thing before it cometh to pass, saw the love of that believing woman, and that her sons were about to become sons of His kingdom, for she had despised everything in her love for Him, He drew her with her sons to this province of Bîrtâ, to a hamlet called Şâwrâ¹ where there was a famous school with enlightened teachers—for that school was still in existence through [the support] of other believing men who feared God, and who carefully provided for the assemblies of scholars, and for the teachers who loved learning. And when this woman had gone into this part of the country, and saw that the believing men who lived there were well attested in the Christian belief, [p. 363] she elected to live in this village, and she entrusted her two beloved sons, Paul and Gabriel, to the school there. And she trained and taught them by works of the perfect life and admonished and counselled them by day and by night to despise and reject all the possessions of this fleeting world, to such a degree that she allowed them to draw nigh to no manner of service, the labour of learning alone excepted. And they remained in that holy school for fifteen years until they were trained in all the doctrine of Divine things, and in the theoretical knowledge of the Scriptures and the understanding and interpretation of them, moreover, they were frequent in the actual practice of fasting, and prayer, and night vigils [which they kept] with their mother, the woman worthy of mention for good; for she would not separate nor depart from them, and she lived in a chamber in the school, and like Hannah the daughter of Penuel,² she persevered with them in standing up in prayer in the temple, and in the vigils of holy festivals, and of first days of the week. And when they had been fully instructed, and needed nothing more from the school—for in the fifteen years they had acquired all ecclesiastical learning—that blessed old woman counselled them to renounce henceforth every material thing¹ of [this] world, and to draw nigh to the ascetic life.

CHAPTER X.

OF THE DISCIPLESHIP OF THE BLESSED PAUL AND GABRIEL
IN THE MONASTERY OF RABBAN CYPRIAN.

Now at that time the congregation of Rabban Cyprian was famous among perfect, upright and holy men, with whom there still existed the sweet smell of the sweat of the labours of that holy man, and by the will of God, and their own freewill choice, and the desire of their mother they elected to draw nigh to the ascetic life in this monastery. And when they two had entered there, and had asked to be received by the old men, and were numbered among the brotherhood, they completed three full years in the service of the community in the ready obedience [which is] acceptable unto God, having careful regard always for the nursing and attendance upon strangers, and [performing] all manner of service for the community; and they became a fair mirror to all the brethren who were in the monastery, and to the strangers who used to come to them. Now Paul was of a zealous nature and somewhat quick-tempered, but the divine man Gabriel was gentle and mild, and he was a man in whom the love of Christ dwelt, and by reason of his gracious disposition he was called *Sâbhâ*¹ by all the brotherhood. What peaceful disposition ever existed which could be compared unto his? What wise man ever possessed the ready disposition [to receive] all men like unto him? For those who had never seen him distinguished and recognized him at once from the report of his characteristic qualities,² the venerable appearance, the gentle word,³ the measured step,⁴ the bent head with his gaze fixed upon the ground, [p. 365] and his stooping position,⁵ when meditating upon the Holy Scriptures at such times as he was free from the service of the monastery. And the two [young men] performed the work of the monastery thoroughly and with great discretion, without which no man is able to live perfectly the ascetic life, for they went forth into the outer cells of the monastery when all the other monks were celebrating the vigil of a festival, and remained by themselves. Now the excellent Paul received and ministered unto strangers, and he chose this manner of life that he might afford relief and do honour unto all men, to the poor and afflicted, the troubled and the sick, for he had experience in healing the body; and he established the old woman his mother in a chamber near his cell, and thus toiling and labouring in acts of holiness, like the venerable and holy women [of old] and with a good¹ name and a crown of praise, she departed to our Lord in sweet peace; and glorious happiness is prepared for her on the day of His coming. Now the blessed Gabriel chose to dwell in the cell of the monk and to lead the life of an anchorite; and while Paul, like the blessed Abraham, took care by his labour and service to become one who received the poor, Gabriel, like the mighty prophet Elijah, honoured the life of the solitary.

² With the form كَيْدِي, Arab. كَرْدِي, compare كَرْدِي, Arab. كَيْدِي. Mount Kerdô is, according to tradition, the spot upon which the ark rested and where it was swallowed up by the earth. According to a story told in the history of Mâr Âwgîn, a certain Mâr Jacob made up his mind to go to the mountains of Kerdô, and to pray to the Lord to show him the ark and to bring back a plank therefrom. Having taken the advice of Mâr Âwgîn he set out for Kerdô, and upon his arrival at the skirts of the mountain an angel met him and led him to the spot where the ark had been swallowed up. The Lord then appeared to him and told him that he had arrived at the place wherein the ark was laid, and when Mâr Jacob had asked Him to give him a plank therefrom, He caused a plank of the wood of the ark to be set before him. Mâr Jacob received it with joy and returned to Mâr Âwgîn who straightway made from it a cross which he wore upon his neck, and which he afterwards buried in his monastery. CHAPTER XI.

OF THE DEPARTURE OF RABBAN GABRIEL TO THE COUNTRY OF ẀARDÔ TO LEAD THE LIFE OF AN ANCHORITE, AND OF HOW HE CAME BACK AGAIN TO THIS COUNTRY.

Now when [Rabban Gabriel] had been in this monastery a long time labouring and excelling [p. 366] in all the various acts of the life of ascetics, in fasting, and in prayer, in nightly vigils, and sighing and weeping between the times [of prayer],¹ happiness was ascribed to him by all the brotherhood. But when that man, [who was] wise in matters relating to God, saw the honour which was offered to him by all the brotherhood, and that happiness was ascribed to him by every man, he despised and rejected everything, his cell, and the things which were necessary for his use, and everything which he possessed in the monastery, and taking with him the holy Book of the Gospels [wrapped up] in a small cloak, he went out secretly by night, without any one knowing [of his departure]. And because he had decided to become an anchorite and to live remote from any human habitation, and to make himself a stranger to all those who knew him, he directed the course of his journey to the mountains of Ẁardô, and he made himself a dwelling and a place of rest far away from any spot where he was likely to meet a human being, in a hollow which he lighted upon in a thickly wooded glen in a mountain side, for asceticism and voluntary abstinence became his dwelling-place, which was remote from every human consolation, and he never saw a man, and never approached either a habitation or a peaceful and inhabited place during the whole time that he lived there. His food [consisted] of the roots and the fruit with which the Divine Grace kept his life [in him]. What temptation of devils [is there] which did not pass over him there? And what pains [are there] which mortal nature knoweth [how] to bring upon the child of man, which did not come upon the holy man? Those who have lived the life of the anchorite and have tasted its troubles will know the taste of these bitternesses. Now he held conversations with the wild animals, for they came to him constantly. And just as [they stood] before the blessed Noah at the door of the ark, [p. 367] even so also did they stand tranquilly before him—now a wild animal [usually] departeth, and fleeth and shyly runneth away at the sight and approach of a human being—and although they were [usually] afraid of the cage(?)¹ yet they fed and made their homes near him, as if they had taken refuge and shelter in him.

Now the blessed Paul his brother ceased not to weep by reason of the remoteness of the venerable Gabriel, but by day and by night he and the brethren prayed with supplication and beseeching, and entreated God to make known to them what had become of the holy man and where he dwelt; and after a long time, because the blessed Rabban Gabriel became well known to all the people who were in K̄ardô, for our Lord had given healing and great cures by his hand unto many, his fame also reached the wonderful Paul his brother. And having taken a letter of entreaty from the congregation of the brethren who were in this monastery, he rose up and set out to bring him, and he made inquiries about him, and sought [him] out, and it was shewn to him where he dwelt; and when he came up to him, they fell upon each other's neck and wept like loving brothers. And the venerable Paul brought out the letter of the congregation and gave [it] to him, and when he had read it, he did not give his brother a decided answer whether he would go or whether he would not, but he gave the matter to God; and they both stood up the whole night in prayer, [entreating] that the Lord would make known His will unto them. And on the third night when Paul was sleeping through the fatigue of the vigil, the angel of the Lord appeared to Abbâ Gabriel, face to face, and counselled him to set out with his brother, [saying,] "This is the will of the Lord, for thou art set to be a great benefit to that country;" and on the morrow he rose up and came with his brother, while Paul rejoiced, and was glad, [p. 368] and praised God at the return of the holy man his brother. Thus by the power of Christ our Lord which clave to them they came to this country.

CHAPTER XII.

OF THE BLESSED MĀR JOHN, AND OF HIS CONGREGATION
IN THE HOLY MONASTERY OF NĒRABH¹ BARZAI.²

Now inasmuch as I promised above,³ in the history of Rabban Cyprian, when I repeated the names of the holy men who lived in this country, and counted among them the holy John who lived in Nêrabh Barzai (for to this [monastery] came Rabban Gabriel when he returned from K̄ardô, and dwelt therein a long time), to relate the history of this place, it is [now] time for me to do so. This mountain glen⁴ (nêrēbhâ) had a place of ascent on one of its lower sides, but on [all] the others it was fortified from the most remote generations and times of old, when each country had a chief, and when each chief was held to be a petty king⁵ in his country; but each was afraid of the others

² ܢܝܪܒܗ ܢܝܪܒܝܢ i. e., "the glen of Barzai." Barzai, sometimes written Barzî, seems to be derived from Barz (for Burz) "high", and a second word; the form ܢܝܪܒܗ ܢܝܪܒܝܢ Barzôe also seems to exist. It is possible also that Barzai may be connected with the Persian Barâz "wild boar", a beast which in early times was much prized by the Persians; compare Βαράζης, Οὐαράζης, Βράζης, Nöldeke, Geschichte der Perser, p. 240, note 1.

⁴ It is clear from this passage that ܢܝܪܒܗ is a mountain glen or valley with only one place of entrance.

and considered them to be raiders and robbers. And therefore in many places in the mountains, and rocks, and crags thou mayest find fortresses, and castles, and strong cities fenced about with walls, which were built and fortified by the ancients. In this country,¹ according to what is said, there lived a mighty man called Barzai, and he fortified this mountain glen and dug in it great cisterns, that is to say, pits to hold water, and he built caves hewn out of the rock [in it], and it was called Nêrabh Barzai, [p. 369] after the name of that ruler who furnished the fortress and made it a habitable place from the beginning.

Now when the Gospel of our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ had flown abroad, and heathen doctrine and the worship of idols had ceased from the world, all the furrows² of the world ascribed praise to the wise Creator by the mouths of the holy men who were in it,³ and the mountains also ascribed praise to God through the ascetics and anchorites who dwelt in them, according to the word of Isaiah⁴ the prophet, "Those who dwell in the rocks shall give praise, and from the top of the mountains shall they cry out." To this mountain glen then, with other [ascetics] from the territory of the Byzantine Greeks, came the blessed Mâr John, the Metropolitan, the companion and colleague of the seven Bishops who dwelt together all their lives in the holy Monastery of Rîshâ, and this holy Mâr John gathered together to hear his discourse and to listen to what he had to say to them; for they knew of the virtue and righteousness of the man, and they had also heard of the mighty deeds and signs which he wrought in the name of Christ. And when, according to the words of the blessed Paul, "Those who believe will not ask for signs, but only those who do not believe",¹ they asked him to shew them the greatness of his doctrine and belief which [arose] from [the signs], he manifested mightily to them his great works. He brought to life again a man who had been dead three days, and they marvelled; and again he withered by a curse only a large, tall olive tree, to the worship of which Satan had led them on by reason of the beauty and splendour of its growth, the abundance of its fruit, and the density of its foliage. He mocked at fire, for he used to go and sit in it, like Ananias² and his companions, and was in no wise injured; the sun which was held to be a god by those who worshipped it, he turned back by his command; he adjured a fountain of water and stopped it from flowing, and again he gave the permission, and the water came forth; and the blessed John greatly moved and terrified the inhabitants of Kôph by the power of his signs. And when those people saw that the power of God was manifested by his command, not only upon creatures and things, but also upon physical bodies which were accounted gods by them, [p. 371] they bowed the shoulders of their free-will to take upon them the yoke of the chariot of the Cross. And he brought them nigh to holy baptism, he made them partakers in the happiness of the propitiating Mysteries, he pulled down the fire-temple and built them the church which still standeth [there], he brought a teacher for them, he established schools there, and he sanctified it and purified it. From being a field of tares and a shrine of the Calumniator, it hath become this day the field of Christ, and the abiding place for His will, and [its inhabitants] make a boast in the name of the holy Mâr John, as people who by his hands were converted to the worship of God the Maker of heaven and earth.

CHAPTER XIII.

OF THE COMING OF RABBAN GABRIEL TO THE MONASTERY OF NÊRABH BARZAI, OF THE HEADSHIP WHICH HE ACCEPTED, AND OF THE DEATH OF PAUL HIS BROTHER.

Now when the congregation of this Monastery of Nêrabh Barzai heard that the blessed Rabban Gabriel had drawn¹ nigh to their border, since the head who had been appointed over them was dead, they went out to meet him with great honour and ceremony, and they led him to their monastery. And when he had tarried with them a few days, they and the believing men of the place prevailed over him with their entreaties, and he unwillingly accepted the headship of that holy monastery; and he did not wish to dwell with them [in the monastery] below, but in the cell of the holy Mâr John in the place where he was wont to shut himself up. And he lived there for many years, [p. 372] even until he reached the limit of his old age, ministering in the service of angels, and profiting and making [others] profit, and leading [others], and being led himself. And he was watchful to guard himself and the brotherhood which had been entrusted to him, and he was never once negligent in [making] intercession and prostrations in prayer, and in [performing] labours, and in continuing in his strenuous career by day and by night.

Now Rabban Paul his brother lived in the Monastery of Rabban Cyprian, and after a few days the head of that monastery departed [this] temporary life to that of eternity, and by the election of the brethren and by the wish of the believing men [Divine] Grace marked Paul out to be the head and governor of the brethren. And when he had accepted this work he went down to the country of Bêth Garmai, and sold his village Lûz, for as much as anyone would give him, disputing nothing, and he removed and built in this place the temple which had been built some time ago, in the days of Rabban Cyprian, because it was well nigh crumbling into ruins and falling down by reason of its great age. And he also built and furnished the Monastery of the holy Mâr John, where his brother Rabban Gabriel was the head, and whatever [money] was left over he gave and distributed among the poor and needy (may his alms be laid up in heaven!), caring for himself nothing at all, but only that he might give food to the orphans, and the afflicted, and the distressed, and the beggars who came to him. He was kind and gracious to the orphans, he fed the widows, and in his monastery the table was at all times laid ready with good, substantial food as much for the stranger who came there, as for the brethren whom he had appointed therein. He ministered unto the sick, he visited the prisoners, he clothed the naked, he filled the hungry with food, he gave the thirsty to drink, he visited continually the prisoners who were confined in the gaol of Shuḡâ-dhe-ḡadh-bhě-Shabbâ¹ for [non-payment of] taxes, he himself carrying in his own hands food for them, and whatever they were in need of, [p. 373] clothing for the naked, and fruits (?)² for the sick who were among them. But how many [more] times shall we repeat the glorious things of this strenuous labourer who took upon himself the burden of every man? In that day shall our Lord cause him to hear the joyful sound, "I was hungry and thou gavest me to eat, I was thirsty and thou gavest me to drink, I was naked and thou didst clothe me, I was sick and thou didst visit me, I was in prison and thou didst come unto me; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."³

And it came to pass that he went into the city according to his habit of anxious care [for others] to bring back clothes for the ascetics and strangers, and he fell ill there of the severe attack of sickness through which he departed from [this world]. And the brethren who were with him carried him upon an animal and brought him to the monastery, and [his] illness became more severe, and thus being soaked with the sweat of his labours, and his feet worn and broken through [his] travelling in the paths of holy men, he exchanged [this] life which passeth away for that of heaven, and he became the heir of the saints. Then the brethren and the people of all the country were pained at the death of the holy man, and all the brethren from the monasteries round about were gathered together, and they bore his holy body with honour and laid it on the west¹ [side] of the martyrium towards the north by the command of Rabban Gabriel, [who] solemnly adjured and forbade that any tomb-stone or monument whatever should be built above his grave, for he looked upon humility as his monument; may our Lord by his prayers give help and redemption to those who care for this holy house, Amen!

Now when a certain believer whose name was Malbadh, who belonged to a noble family, saw that Rabban Paul had built this monastery and finished it, and had obtained a great and fair renown thereby, he was smitten with envy, and he presumed to set himself in opposition to these holy men, and wasted much money uselessly, and built a so-called monastery² near Şâwrâ. [p. 374] And he filled it with fine buildings, and provided it with cells, and he invited [thither] ascetics, promising [them] that he would care for them in everything; but he did not know that a monastery for ascetics must be built by holy ascetics and virgins [themselves], and not by wealthy denizens of the world. And Rabban Gabriel, who was in the habit of enjoying Divine revelations, made a mock of that building, saying, "Behold, as it is written in Ezekiel,¹ it is founded, but it shall not prosper;" and in a short time that house began to be deserted, and the two or three ascetics who dwelt therein were scattered, and it remained in its miserable² condition as it is apparent to all men.

CHAPTER XIV.

OF THE HEADSHIP OF THE MONASTERY OF RABBAN CYPRIAN WHICH RABBAN GABRIEL RECEIVED, AND OF HIS WATCHFUL REGARD FOR EVERY DUTY.

Now after the departure of Rabban Paul of holy memory to [his] everlasting home, this monastery began to be in want and to become poor; for their divine protector Paul had already left them, and the monks also began to depart. And the people of this country together with these brethren were gathered together, and they went to Rabban Gabriel in the Monastery of Mâr John of Nêrabh Barzai, and shewed him that this monastery would certainly fall into decay if it was deprived of his protection. And they said to him, [p. 375] "All the brethren are going away, and this holy place which thou hast toiled to build up is becoming deserted." And the blessed man answered and said to them, "I am unable to go to [any] place without the Divine command which permitted me to return from Kardô, and which gave me rest in this holy place; but return all of you, each man to his house, and this night I and these brethren will pray to our Lord, and that which is best He will do for us". And in the evening at the general service of prayer he commanded the brethren to pray concerning the matter, and he himself went up to the cell of Abbâ John, and offered up prayer to God the whole night. And towards the morning when his wakefulness rested, his mind was carried away, and it was as if he were in the martyrdom of Rabban Cyprian. And Rabban Cyprian himself was alive and singing this psalm¹ by himself, "How good, and how pleasant [it is] for brethren when they dwell together", and it seemed as if Rabban Cyprian were asking him to sing the verses of this psalm in turn with him. And when he had said the last verse, "For there the Lord commanded blessing and life for evermore", he woke up and came to himself glad and rejoicing, and he knew that the vision was from the Lord, and that he had received permission to depart from there to the dwelling of [Rabban Cyprian]'s monastery where his marvellous brother Paul had ended his life. And in the morning he went down to the monastery and appointed a guardian in his stead, and promising that he would never forget them, he and the brethren of the monastery came down hither. And he began the work of relieving the poor and the brethren of the monastery like unto his brother, but he helped them more than he did, and he manifested the greatest can serve our Lord in this life, and [then] we pass away, but the reward for our small service is laid up for us [for] a space of time which is not diminished by the course and revolutions of times and seasons. Consider, my beloved, how many troubles and trials the holy Prophets bore, and how many afflictions and tortures the blessed Apostles endured, and the sufferings and bitter deaths which the victorious martyrs suffered for the sake of the kingdom of heaven! Consider the ascetic fathers how they forsook the world and its possessions, [p. 377] and [how] they forgot the love of parents and brethren, and how they went forth naked into the wilderness to live by themselves for the love of our Lord Who said to them, “Whosoever will not forsake parents, and brethren, and sons, and daughters, and everything, and hate himself, and take up his cross”, —that is to say troubles, and trials, and bitterness— “and endure for My sake everything which shall afflict [him], and deny himself the things that are visible, is not able to be my disciple.”¹ Let us not then, beloved, be readers of the glorious deeds of holy men without carrying out in ourselves their course of life, for God, the Lord of all, reproacheth the man who readeth but doeth not, by the hand of David,² thus, “What hast thou to do with the books³ of My commandments? Thou hast taken My covenant in thy mouth, but thou hast hated my instruction, and thou hast cast My words behind thee.” And again the divine Paul writeth in his beloved epistles,⁴ “Those who know⁵ the law are not [accounted] righteous before God, but those who do the law are justified". Let us not put our trust upon the tunic, and the black cloak, and the tonsure, and the garb with which we are clothed, as if these were anything at all before God. For there are in the world poor people who do not possess even these things, but are naked and in want, and are afflicted and needy, and have not even the bread of the day, yet God doth not shew compassion on them for the the sake of their being in want, because poverty is their business in life. And although ye fast and pray, and watch, and work, still all the labour of all the days of your lives is not worthy to be compared with the gift of food with which God sustaineth you in this life; give up, then, expecting to be rewarded for it with a reward in the world which is to come. For the happiness of that world is not given for the sake of labours, but is bestowed upon holy men by Divine Grace, for the wages which are laid up there are in proportion to the righteousness of God, [p. 378] and the [merits of the] labours of holy men are completely put out of sight by the Grace of God. So then, my beloved, let us not imagine that the little work which we do [here] can justify us before God, but let us be the more filled with fear lest our parents and our brethren who are involved in earthly affairs, and who give tribute, whose heads are bowed under the payment of imperial taxes, who relieve the afflicted and shew compassion upon the needy, and who imagine that we are righteous, may be found there before our Lord to be better than we are; for it is written, "Blessed is he that giveth more than he that receiveth."¹ Let us not then destroy that blessing by eating the labour of believing men, and by doing nothing which is worth our food; for the hireling who laboureth honestly before his companion keepeth [his] covenant with his master who hath hired him; and if in the presence of a man like unto himself he is careful not to eat the bread of his labour without fatigue, how much more is it meet for us to live upon the bread of our Lord with tears, and not to neglect for one moment the service and labour which our holy garb demandeth. My brethren, let us remember that unchangeable kingdom, and that never-ending feast and that everlasting¹ light in which the saints revel with delight. And let us earnestly desire that brotherhood which is never attacked by envy,² and that undisturbed³ concord, and that unbroken⁴ unanimity, and that insatiable⁵ love by which the hearts of the righteous are filled at the sight of the adorable splendour of Christ. And [let us remember] that assembly of the Church gathered together from spiritual and corporeal beings which is never to be dispersed; [p. 379] and that unchangeable happiness of the sounds of the songs of joy of those who sing; and that humility which can never be puffed up;⁷ and that inheritance which can never be spoiled,⁸ which the righteous inherit in the world of light; and the incomparable¹ glory with which the children of light there are clothed; and the gift which can never be stolen away,² which the blessed inherit in the new world of Christ; and that praise which can never be silenced,³ which is loudly proclaimed by all rational beings. And if the vigilant understanding of your souls be occupied in meditation upon these and such-like things, O my venerable brethren, ye will find the power and be able to tread down and to hold in contempt the foul passions which are stirred up within you by reason of the wretchedness and earthiness⁴ of the body with which ye are clothed, and by the erring nature of the changeable soul which is in you; and ye shall be worthy of the Grace which is the bestower of all gifts, so that ye may live out your days in peace which is free from all strivings, according to the Will of your Creator. And ye shall become in this world holy temples in which the praises of the Lord are sung; and ye shall be glorious tabernacles in which the songs of glory and redemption are heard; and ye shall become like luminaries [shining] in the darkness, whose good works [men] shall see and shall glorify your Father Who is in heaven; and ye shall be crowned with the glory which is laid up for all the righteous who have been and who shall be." And with these and such-like words did that holy mouth preach and make to listen the ears of the flock which had been entrusted to him. And they became like unto good seed sown in a cultivated field of good ground, and the furrows of the souls of his disciples brought forth fruit; and the holy children of his fatherly [rule] became well known and esteemed, and every day and always the sons of this congregation, [which was under] [p. 380] the direction of this good and famous labourer in the sanctuary, the all-wise and holy Rabban Gabriel, became the occasion of praise of their Lord.

CHAPTER XV.

OF THOSE ASCETICS AND HOLY MEN WHO WERE TO BE FOUND IN VARIOUS PLACES IN THE DAYS OF RABBAN GABRIEL.

Now in the days of Rabban [Gabriel] many ascetics were to be found, some of whom were solitary brethren who lived in a monastery, and some were Bishops and Metropolitans, of whom we have made mention in this history that we might be blessed through recording their names; and we will shew forth concerning Rabban Gabriel who was well known and famous among them.

In the holy monastery of Bêth 'Âbhê there lived a holy ascetic whose name was Abbâ Dômat (Domitius), and he was a righteous and famous man by whose hands Christ our Lord wrought many mighty deeds. And the rags from his garments drove away the devils openly as did those from the clothes of Paul;¹ now as he also came from the country of Bêth Garmai he had great affection for Rabban Gabriel.

In the Monastery of Bêth Rabban bar-^cIdtâ¹ there lived a holy man who was called Îshô^c-sabhran bar-Mâmai,² a good and self-denying man, and sicknesses were driven away by the *maṣṭaba*³ upon which he rested himself; [p. 381] he was finally appointed Bishop of the great city of Nineveh (Môṣul). This man restored the temple of that monastery, and removed it from its site, as did Rabban Paul in this monastery.

In a mountain glen called Bêth Gazzâ there dwelt the marvellous ascetics Khômînâ⁴ and Ma'nâ, [who were] aged solitaries, and who wrought many mighty deeds, for they were many times seen by believers to cross over on the top of the Great Zâb river.

The holy Abbâ Pethion lived a glorious life of asceticism by himself in a cell [situated] in a mountain glen called Ṣaphî. He was a good and self-denying man, and was seen by men but rarely; devils and sicknesses fled away from the bread which had been blessed and given [to people] by him. He departed this temporary life there, and his body was removed to a village called Rîshâ.

Abbâ Hâbhîbhâ and Jacob his brother shone with the light of virtue in the mountain of Yânân; they made whole those who were sick of the palsy, they gave barren women children, they forbade the locusts to injure the vines, and everything was obedient to their command.

In the Monastery of Bêth Kôḡâ¹ there lived—famous for holiness—Abbâ Sabhr-Îshô^c, surnamed Khěphîphâ (i. e., Humpback), who was a truly ascetic monk, and also Abbâ 'Abd-Îshô^c of Kartaw.² This latter ascetic had no door to his cell so that no man could come into his cell, and he could go out to no man. Now he was exceedingly poor, and he had no care for his dwelling-place—even so also was the holy man Gabriel—and he was like the ostriches and other birds, [and he lived] remote and in solitude away from disturbing influences in the voluntary poverty of his mind.

In the mountain of Zînai³ there lived tried solitaries, [p. 382] and discreet anchorites, concerning one of whom whose name was Amonius the [following] wonderful thing is told. Every wild goat which had fallen from a rock or any high place, and injured itself, came to him to be healed; and once when his servant, [who was] a believing man, went to carry [his] food to him, he found there with him a she-goat with her leg broken, and it had been set and bound up by that holy old man, and her two young ones were with her. And as a proof of the truth of [this] wonderful thing the believing man took one of the young ones, and brought [it] to his village, and I have seen people who saw that kid which lived tame in the village from year to year.

At that time certain holy fathers flourished in the government of the Church. On the throne of Arbela [sat] the blessed Metropolitan, Mâr Aḥâ,¹ and after him the marvellous Mâr Mâran^c-ammeh,² and after them Mâr Îshô^c-yahbh³ the Metropolitan. Now the venerable Rabban Gabriel flourished during the life-time of those three Metropolitans who wrought many mighty deeds during their governorships, and as he sprang from this country which was [under] their jurisdiction, they had great affection for him, and he was accounted by them a mighty man, and a servant of righteousness.

In the church of the city of Adiabene [there lived] the holy and praiseworthy Bishop Mâr Solomon, [who was] a fellow-worker with the Apostles, and who, like Peter,⁴ by his command only used to drive away refractory devils; he passed over on the top of the great river Tigris many times, and he cursed the wicked man K̄ardagh, and made a horn to grow out of his forehead. [p. 383] But why should I weary my fingers with writing his glorious deeds? for behold they are written at great length by his disciples. Now the [hair of] his head and his beard were shaved off from this man, worthy of blessing, by a heathen king because of the conversion which he wrought among the heathen.

Now in the Church on the episcopal throne of Sinjâr¹ the holy Mâr Shûbhḥal-Mâran was being glorified, and all his great and splendid works were superhuman. For when he was appointed Bishop in the great church of Nisibis,² and was obliged to go to the Patriarch that [the enthronement] might be performed, he took the boat in which he embarked from Bâlâdh to Baghdad in one night,³ [that is] he made the boat go down to Baghdad; and so also when he came up he brought the boat in which he sailed back to Bâlâdh in one night. And [once] when Satan smote his disciple and blinded his eyes he adjured Satan, and he

In the country of Hĕnâithâ,¹ in a mountain half way towards Ma allthâ,² there dwelt a certain solitary whose name was Mârôi, and on the mountain of a village near him there lived a dragon which used to come each day and carry off an ox from the herd. And when those men came to him, and wept before him concerning the injuries which they [suffered] from that destructive beast, he went with them to the dragon's cave; and when the dragon saw them he hissed like a serpent and came down against them, and the holy old man cursed him, and straightway he became like a senseless stone. And he stands [there] to this day, and is like unto a clay building, and those who pass along the road rest under his shadow, and marvelling, praise God and bless that holy man, and make entreaty for his prayers.

[p. 384] And on the episcopal throne of Salâkh³ there shone with apostolic light the holy Bishop Mâr Îshô^c-zĕkhâ, who came from the country of Bĕth Armâyê;⁴ this [holy] man cursed a certain large vine belonging to some proud and insolent men, and tore it up by its roots.

In Salâkh Gâwaitâ⁵ there was a village called 'Ulâi,⁶ are greater than any related in history; it is not however, our affair to relate things about him, but that of the holy men who have composed accounts of his noble deeds.

In the Monastery of Bar-Ṭûrâ¹ there shone like a heavenly star with the light of his holiness, the blessed Abbâ Mark, who put the heathen to shame, and exalted the horn of the Church by the noble deeds which he shewed forth before multitudes of people.

And in those days and times, [p. 385] the monk and ascetic the holy Abbâ 'Anân-Îshô^c, who is worthy of being mentioned with all the righteous, built and completed the monastery near the city of Ḥadhattâ, and he established a famous congregation by the mighty deeds and wonders which our Lord wrought by his hands.

In the country of Bêth Běghâsh² the holy Bishop Mâr Simon³ was glorious in his ecclesiastical pasture and government which was [situated] there; he it was who built the church in the village of Shalmath⁴ when he was a teacher there, and he shewed forth many healings in the world in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. During the time of his episcopate the mention of his name was a subject for boasting for all Christians, and even after his departure from the tabernacle of his holy bones every healing of the body and of the soul was vouchsafed unto whomsoever took refuge in him.

These and such-like wonderful things were performed by the hands of these holy men, [to write] the noble deeds of each of whom would require a history to be specially devoted to the purpose; I have, however, written down the histories of certain of them in another book. Now inasmuch as I have made mention of them twice, [I did so] the first time, that I might make manifest what lamps were shining in the Church in the days of Rabban Gabriel, and the second time, that those who read this book might hearken to [the account of] his wonderful deeds, and might not remain unbelievers when they hear repeated before them [the story of] the mighty works which our Lord wrought by the hands of this member of His household.

OF THE REVELATIONS CONCERNING THINGS OF THE FUTURE WHICH THE HOLY RABBAN MÂR GABRIEL¹ RECEIVED FROM GOD.

Unto what limit now shall we extend our feeble discourse in demonstrating the greatness of this marvellous man? Let us come now, little by little, and as it were by brief signs and indications we will [first] relate concerning the revelations which came to him, and afterwards [we will speak] about the miracles and mighty works which he wrought, and thus with the steps of [our] narrative of him we shall travel on to the conclusion of [this] history.

Who now is unacquainted with 'Amran bar-Muḥammad¹ of the family of el-Azd,² who was descended from the [tribe of] the great Taiman,³ the exceedingly stubborn servant whose asperity was softened and mollified by means of this holy head? Now before this Arab came to this country, God, the Lord of all, had revealed before the eyes of the mind of the holy man the beginning and end of this man, and concerning his children, and his childrens' children, for five generations; and he became known to him in this wise:— Rabban once wished to sell certain oxen of the herd belonging to the monastery to provide for the ministration of the brethren, and he sent ten oxen with a monk to the market of the village of Yazdainâbhâdh,⁴ and he commanded him, saying, "Take these oxen, and go to Yazdainâbhâdh, and do not take them into the market, but pasture them above the village. And behold, a man will come to you mounted upon a horse, and will haggle concerning their price with thee with

[p. 387] many words, but thou shalt not strike a bargain with him, neither shalt thou accept their price from him. And when he shall say to thee, 'Wait until I bring thee their price,' thou shalt say to him, 'Thus saith Mâr Gabriel, Whenever it is easy for thee, take their price and come [with it] to me to the monastery.'" And when that brother had gone and had done as he had been commanded, behold 'Amran came, and when he saw the oxen he turned aside [to look at] them. And having enquired about their condition he said, "Hast thou brought them to sell?" and the brother answered and said to 'Amran, "What is thy name?" and he said, "Why askest thou concerning my name?" The monk said, "My father Rabban Gabriel commanded me, saying, 'Behold a certain Ishmaelite whose name is 'Amran will come to thee, deliver the oxen to him freely, and say to him, I know that thou hast not the money to pay for them, but whenever God hath made it ready for thee, take [it] and come [with it] to me to the monastery that I may see thee.'" And when 'Amran heard these things [about himself from] this holy old man who was not even acquainted with him, for he had not as yet entered into [his] inheritance of the estates of Margâ,¹ he marvelled and was astonished, and he knew that this man must be great, for, said he, "He saw my coming to the market, and saw that I wished to buy oxen;" and he knew and perceived with his soul's understanding that the esteem of the Christians was mighty and exalted before God, for behold their holy men see and know the things which are hidden. So he took the oxen and went [his way], and the monk returned to Rabban and informed him of all that had happened meanwhile; and Rabban was silent and answered never a word. Now after a day or two behold 'Amran knocked at the door [of the monastery], and when they opened the door for him and he had gone in he asked for Rabban and fell down upon the ground before him, and Rabban kissed him on the head and blessed him; [p. 388] and 'Amran brought [out] the money, the price of the oxen. And as he was sitting down he embraced Rabban's legs as a mark of honour, and entreated him to pray for him, and Rabban answered and said to him, "If thou wilt establish a covenant before God and before myself that thou wilt not slay the Christians, I will reveal to thee what thou shalt become, and what shall happen to thy children, and to thy children's children." And he swore before him, saying, "From this day and henceforth to the most remote time,¹ among the Christians a man like unto thyself I will never harm. Thou hast heard concerning the children of Bôzî,² but they acted wickedly towards me, and exasperated me with their fables and pride." The blessed man answered and said to him, "If thou wilt restrain thy sword from the people of God, behold God will make thee, and thy children, and thy children's children to inherit peacefully all this country of Margâ, and the men who shall arise from thy seed shall become strong and mighty, and no man shall be able to stand before them and conquer. Like Nîsân¹ with its blossoms and flowers, and the vine with its clusters of grapes, even so shall they be distinguished in their appearance and strength from the other families of the Arabs. Thus hath it been revealed to me by God, in comparison with the love of Whom I count the whole world as nothing, and I entreat thee to command the sons whom God shall raise up from thee to shew love to the Christians, and especially to the monasteries and convents, and to ascetics, and scholars, and priests, and deacons." And 'Amran undertook to act according to the command of Rabban, and he did so, and he likewise commanded his sons to do so. Such was the revelation which appeared to the holy old man.

² The "children of Bôzî" seem to have been a Kurdish or Persian family from whom the place ܒܘܙܝܐ took its name, and it would appear from Thomas of Margâ's report of 'Amran's conversation that they had been driven out of their dwelling-place by the Banû 'Imrân; see Hoffmann, Auszüge, p. 196.

And again, there were three hamlets near the monastery of the holy man, the inhabitants of which, together with all the heathen, robbed and vexed this holy house; and when the brethren made a complaint [to Rabban], [p. 389] he said to them merely, "They will be made desolate utterly", and this actually came to pass. Moreover, by the [gift of] prophecy which dwelt in him he made known concerning the revolt in the kingdom which took place before this our generation. And as we have said above, he shewed aforetime to the brethren concerning the desolation of the Monastery of Malbadh,² and the ruin of all his family, and of the

² It is not probable that مَلْبَد is the مَلْبَدُ بْنُ حَرْمَلَةَ الشَّيْبَانِيِّ whose acts are described in Ibn al-Athîr, tom. v. pp. 369—371. We are told by Thomas of Margâ, (supra, p. 650) that Gabriel glory which descended¹ not after him; and behold the sight of that ruined and desolate place testifieth to the words of the holy man.

And he shewed aforetime concerning the death, which should take place before his own, of his beloved fellow-labourer and ascetic Abbâ Dômat (Domitius) of Bêth 'Âbhê, and when that holy old man was dying [Rabban] said to the brethren, who were in his monastery, "In this night shall the perfection of the blessed Abbâ Dômat (Domitius) be accomplished, and his soul shall be exalted to the treasuries of heaven; this day shall Satan, the foe of holy men, be put to shame by reason of the escape of that divine old man from his crafty wiles."

Now divine visions which surpassed our knowledge appeared to him frequently, but through the negligence of authors they have not been set down in writing; we, however, by a very few of the things which have been said about him, like a drop of rain out of the whole shower, or like a single block of stone out of the whole mountain, make known to what measure [of power] this divine man attained.

was a contemporary of Mâr Aḥâ, Mâr Mâran-'ammeh and Mâr Îshô'-yahbh [of Adiabene], and we know that these Metropolitans lived in the VIIth century of our era; ملبّد بن حرمله, however, died about A. H. 137 (A. D. 754), and if he had been a contemporary of Mâr Aḥâ he must have been considerably more than 100 years old at the time of his death. For the account of Malbadh's monastery see Bk. VI. chap. 13, supra p. 639.

CHAPTER XVII.

OF THE WONDERS, AND MIGHTY WORKS OF HEALING, AND CURES OF ALL KINDS WHICH WERE WROUGHT BY THE HANDS OF RABBAN GABRIEL.

Let us now turn, [p. 390] the might of the prayer of this holy man cleaving unto us, to the mighty deeds which Christ wrought, and the wonders which He shewed forth by his hands. "A city which is built upon a mountain cannot be hid,"¹ as [long as] it pleaseth Christ our Lord, and according to His command, neither may His disciples conceal His mysteries and revelations. Now although certain holy men have excelled in mighty works of excellence, yet wonders and the working of mighty deeds have not been performed by their hands; and this did not happen through any defect or lack of renown on their part, but because God, the only wise Being, giveth to every man that [gift] which is most suitable for him. And because human nature is deceitful,² and Satan lieth³ in wait continually, and lurketh⁴ to compass its ruin, especially in the case of holy men and of those who have often cut through his snares and laughed at his wily tricks, our Lord God withholds from certain men this gift of healing. For behold, we see that to the divine Paul, who was the tongue of Christ,¹ who fulfilled His designs,² and who was the great pillar and father of the churches of the Gentiles which had been sanctified by his hands with the mark of the Cross of Christ, was delivered a goad for his flesh,³ the messenger⁴ of Satan, which was his moderate weakness, lest by the excellence of the revelations and signs which he used to work, after he had preached to others he himself might become a castaway.⁵ So then everything⁶ cometh from the will of the Governor,⁷ Who, according to His inscrutable fore-knowledge, perfecteth in those who are participators in His counsel those things which are administered for the common good. Now this holy man, our father Mâr Gabriel, having aforetime, from the beginning of his discipleship, [p. 391] embraced humility, chose to be considered of no account and unknown, and he passed the whole period of his life in this [manner], even until his old age, when by the Divine choice he was called to the headship of this holy monastery, and our Lord gave by his hands mighty deeds and gifts which fell short in nothing of those possessed by the early fathers. And, notwithstanding that he was the fountain and origin of the healings which were wrought by him, many afflictions came upon him from the wicked men who were his neighbours in this place, whom Satan, the enemy of our master, stirred up [against him] every day and always, and they were gathered together against him with threats and curses to put him to shame in this place, as afterwards, little by little, by the help of God we will prove with our words.

Now when Rabban [Gabriel] lived in the Monastery of Mâr John, and was carrying out his customary duties, a certain man from the village of Tellâ¹ came to him in the month of² Îlûl, and said to him sadly, "The vines in our village have been severely smitten by the hail, and my vine only remaineth uninjured." The blessed man said to him, "My son, a punishment hath been sent upon you by God for your benefit, and whosoever receiveth the chastisement of the Lord, the Lord will bind up his wound. Had the hail smitten thy vine also it would have been for thy benefit; but thou must know that destruction [of thy vine] awaiteth thee. If the sin is the sin of the whole community, the chastisement also must be of the whole community." And that man went and pressed the grapes of his vine, and he poured his wine into a wine jar and sealed it; and when he went back to look at it on the following day, behold the wine jar was empty and there was nothing inside it. Thus the words of Rabban were actually fulfilled.

Once while he lived in the cell of Mâr John, [p. 392] when he was sitting in front of his cell and reading a book, an eagle came and carried off a kid of the goats belonging to the monastery. And when Rabban saw that the kid bleated, and that the eagle was carrying it up to his nest to devour, he said to the eagle, "For the sake of our Lord let down carefully what thou hast taken"; and the eagle, as if some heavy thing were hanging from him, let the kid down little by little, and laid it on the ground without injury, and spread out his wings and flew away. And all those who heard concerning these things from the shepherd, praised God, but because they were the beginning of the miracles of the blessed man they were perturbed and frightened. And the holy man answered and said to them, "My brethren, be not astonished at this thing which hath taken place, for it hath not happened through my power, but by God, Who hath made manifest these things on your account; I am a weak man and a sinner, and this hath been wrought by your prayers. Every wild animal, and beast, and bird, and reptile is made subject unto divine and holy men,¹ even as Another time also there came to him a certain Persian believer from the village of Bêth Këwâz, which [is situated] on the Great Zâb, leading with him his two sons who were vexed by evil spirits; the name of the one was Noah, and that of the other Marwâ, and he entreated Rabban to pray for them. Then Rabban commanded and the boys were brought to him, and he anathematized those devils, saying, "In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, Who cast out legions¹ from him who dwelt among the tombs, I command you to come forth from these boys"; and while the brethren were standing before him and all looking on, [the devils] came forth from their mouths in the form of fire. Thus by the word of Rabban [p. 393] they received healing from the vexation of obstinate devils, and that man returned to his house rejoicing and praising God.

One day a mad dog came forth from the village of Nîram, and as it passed by some children who were playing, it fell upon one whose name was Mârôn, and tore open his belly, and his bowels came out freely, and his parents carried him and brought him to Rabban. And when he saw him he was much grieved for him, and he commanded and they put the child's bowels back into his belly, and he made the sign of the Cross over them, and thus by the word of Rabban the wound was healed.

In the village of Hĕtârâ,¹ which is situated on the [bank of] the river Hâzer,² there was a certain man whose name was Naggârâ;³ he belonged to the race of the Shahrîghân,⁴ and had a son whose name was Maslamâh.⁵ Now this boy was smitten with a very virulent sore, and his father sent him to this monastery, and the old man gave him a hĕnânâ, and commanded him not to eat meat or anything of that nature until the end of the Fast of the Apostles; and when the fifty days were ended the boy had become whole.⁶ And his father commanded one of the members of his home to bring some fish from the river, and to carry [them] with the boy to Rabban, and some they fried [to eat] in the village, and some they left alive and took with them as they came to this monastery. And the young man who was with Maslamâh was a heathen, and when they drew near to the precincts of the monastery on the first day of the week which ended the "Week of the Apostles"—now the boy was fasting to receive the Holy Mysteries—the heathen young man counselled the boy with the counsel of Eve,⁷ saying, "Thou art fasting now, and when thou goest to the monks thou wilt be ashamed to eat, [p. 394] but I will and laid him upon the ground uninjured; and the young men and the brethren marvelled and were astonished.

And with this miracle the blessed man wrought also another wonderful thing at the table in the refectory while they were eating. When the brethren had taken the gift and had sat down to eat the good things¹ which the Lord had brought to them, Maslamâh and his companion ate with deliberation.² And Rabban said to Maslamâh,³ "My son, see what this my servant telleth me." Now the old man had as his disciple a young man whose name was Kûphrâ,⁴ the son of Sabhr-Îshô^c, a believer [who came] from Nîram, a village of shepherds, and when many illnesses had waxed strong in him, his father set him apart to become the servant of Rabban, if ever he should become well, and by the mediation of this holy man this actually came to pass, and he became a disciple, and a monk, and afterwards head of a monastery. At that moment this young man was standing before Rabban, [p. 395] and to him Rabban directed the gaze of the boy Maslamâh, saying, "This [my] servant counselleth thee to eat abundantly, for a crow hath carried off that which ye hid in a tree." And with the word of Rabban, behold [there came] upon the roof a large black crow,⁵ [holding] in his beak the bread and the fish which the young men had hidden in the tree; thus astonishment about the crow and what he carried followed closely upon their wonder concerning the cat.¹ These and such-like things were wrought by the hands of this our prophet.

At another time there came to him a certain believing man from Nineveh (Môşul), who, although he had lived with his wife a long time, was not called the father of children; to him Rabban gave a ḥēnânâ, and having prayed for him, he dismissed him, and three children were born to him through the prayers of Rabban, and he also was called the father of children.

A certain man from the village of Amûlḥîr² was sorely vexed by Satan, and he shouted out with cries by day and by night, and he was brought to Rabban by his parents; and as soon as he had gone into the martyrrium and Rabban had anointed him with the oil of prayer,³ he was made whole, and became free from attack.

And a certain man from the village of Bîrtâ who had no children, came and knocked at the door of the old man with supplication, and asked for his prayers,⁴ and in due time twins were born to him. And Rabban commanded him to minister unto the poor and the strangers "in return for the double blessing which God hath given thee;" and that believer undertook and did according to the command of Rabban.

saw the mighty deeds and wonders which the holy man was working against the devils her masters, [p. 396] she set herself in opposition to him, that they might make an end of him and destroy him out of the world. And although Rabban had known concerning her for some time past, he had never done her any harm, nor given information concerning her; now this woman set her face to slay Rabban, whom the wretched creature was not only not able to harm in any way, but she, the wretched creature, destroyed herself. And she took in her bosom¹ some dried white grapes and went straight to him; now Rabban was saying Compline at the door of the martyrrium.² And when she saw him, she bowed down before him, and reproaching him in, as it were, a loving manner said, "Because I am a poor and sinful woman, thou neither liftest up my head, nor takest any care for me, as thou dost for the other widows whom thou feedest." And the holy man rebuked her, saying, "Depart, wretched woman, thou hast no need of sustenance at my hands, for thou hast other protectors;" but she did not understand that he spake of the devils whom she served, and sighing she sadly entreated him

 κόγχη, where the lecterns stood. In this case that part of the church was accessible to every body, and the appearance of this woman in it can be readily explained.

to receive the few dried grapes which she had brought to him. And Rabban, knowing of the strange power that was hidden therein, answered and said to her, "Get thee gone, woman; I have harmed thee in no way, what hast thou to do with me? Light hath no portion with darkness, neither can the adorers of the Cross be participators in the table and the food¹ of devils." Now although [Rabban had spoken] thus, she nevertheless dared to throw the grapes down upon the doorstep of the martyrrium before the holy old man, and she left [him] and went away. And as Rabban was singing the psalm, with the top of his staff he traced [a figure of] the Cross over and among them, and they were straightway changed into large, [p. 397] strong wasps. And they flew after that despicable woman and overtook her on the road, and they took vengeance upon her for the insult to the holy man, and they stung her upon her face and head, and she died immediately, and fell into the river;² and every man was astonished at the terrible death which had happened to the wretched woman.

And again the Calumniator, who wishes to make a mock of the holy men of our Lord, and who was lurking³ in ambush and watching for the ruin of that mighty old man, into whom none of his arrows ever stuck,⁴ and whom no spiritual or corporeal blemish ever touched, brought upon him, and upon his monastery innumerable trials, in which Rabban was victorious, and inflicted severe defeat upon his enemy, who sometimes troubled him by the stubborn heathen, and sometimes by other afflictions.

Now there lived in the village of Bêth 'Ôbhîd¹ a woman who was exceedingly beautiful, and she set the beauty with which mortal nature had endowed her as a stumbling-block for the children of the race of mankind, and Satan invited and led on this woman [to attempt] the ruin of this divine man. And she rose up and adorned herself like a harlot with all the ornaments which stir up lust for women in men, and she put *kohl*² on her eyes, and tired her head like Jezebel, and like Jezebel she also was about to drink the cup of the wrath of the Lord; and she hung upon herself all her ornaments of gold and silver, and she rose up and set out from the village and made her journey to the monastery of Rabban. Now Rabban was among a great crowd of people who were sick and afflicted with devils, and she also went in among them all breathing forth the evil smelling scent of her perfumes, and she waited until every one had gone forth on his way. And when she saw that Rabban remained alone she dared to stand before him with her face uncovered, [p. 398] and she showed him her beauty without shame. And Rabban answered in his accustomed gracious manner, and said to her, "What is the cause of thy

And Rabban was passionately enraged with her, and he cursed her, and she fell down on her face straightway, and he called brother Kûphrâ his servant to gather her up, and commanded him to drag her outside; and she went to her village in great pain, and on the morning of the morrow she was buried, and behold she was reserved for a judgment more bitter than death. And this thing was known to all who dwelt in the country, and they glorified our Lord Who made the holy man victorious, because by the memory of her [whom] the holy man burnt up with his curses and destroyed, the lust of the lascivious perished.

And on a certain day the heathen from the hamlets round about came by night and fell upon Bêth Hësikhê,¹ the forest² of the monastery, with axes and scythes, and they mercilessly hacked and hewed and threw down [the trees]; and they at the same time were making threats against the monastery, saying, "We will burn it with fire, and we will make it a waste place as if it had never existed;" and when the sacristan went out to strike the board for morning [prayer], he heard the noise of those that were cutting the trees, and he went in and informed Rabban. And the holy man went out to speak with them, and to admonish them for their daring behaviour, but the children of destruction poured out insulting words upon him, and with bitter pain in his heart he cursed them as Elisha cursed the children,¹ and straightway the angel of the Lord slew them with the exception of one who remained [alive] to proclaim their audacious behaviour. Thus the prayer of this altar of prayer was heard and accepted, [p. 399] and at the first moving of his request the work [of destruction] was performed.

And again Satan, who desired their destruction, inflamed [the hearts of] the inhabitants of a village called Bêth Tîmai,² who were heathen, and evil livers, and thieves, to come and smite the monks and to plunder the community; and when they had come and many of the brethren had been badly wounded, and had had their bones broken by them, the [other] brethren went in and informed Rabban of the audacious violence³ of those godless men. And Rabban admonished the brethren, saying, "My sons, for the sake of Christ, your Lord, endure insults and blows from [your] enemies, for He said, 'In the world ye shall have tribulation';⁴ and what man or what saint ever departed from [this] world

And again when the ‘Amran bar-Muḥammad—whom we have mentioned above¹—had gone in and inherited the lands [round about], and with them also Nîram of the shepherds, in which he lived, because of the love which he had for this righteous man—for he had actually done what Rabban asked him [to do]—he called to one of his servants and said to him, “Go to Rabban Gabriel and say to him, if he has a little wheat, let him lend it to us, and as soon as we bring the corn into the granary we will pay him double.” Now it was the season of Nîsân² when it happeneth that many people are in need [of wheat]. And when he that had been sent had come [to Rabban], the holy old man rose up and shewed him a hollow³ in the ground, that is to say, a pit, full of wheat, and said to him, “Behold, my son, take all this wheat and carry it to thy master”. And this servant took up out of the pit as many loads as he pleased, leaving, however, some behind, for he was mindful not to take all the grain, having compassion for the brethren that they themselves might not lack. And he left [the monastery] and went to ‘Amran, and when ‘Amran asked him if any [wheat] was left in the pit, he was afraid of his master’s violence, and told him, saying, “I did leave a little there for the food of the monastery and of the old man.” [p. 401] Then ‘Amran according to his cruel disposition asked him to go back and bring also what was left, saying, "Rabban Gabriel will lack nothing." And when the servant had gone back to the old man he made the matter known to Rabban, who answered and said to him, "O my son, I have lent all the pitful [of wheat] to 'Amran, do not therefore leave anything in it that thou dost not carry away." And when the servant went to the pit he opened it and saw, and behold it was full to the top as before, and he looked and was astonished, and he went back having loaded the mule, and related [the matter] to his master, who marvelled and was astonished, and did not send again [to Rabban]. How wonderful is the love of God towards holy men, who having elected to live in penury and to be unpraised and unknown, in that, contrary to their wishes, it leadeth on their part to¹ the praise of His great power, and in such a way that they provoke those who love its excellence! CHAPTER XVIII.

OF THE LAMENTABLE DEATH OF RABBAN GABRIEL, AND OF HIS DEPARTURE TO THE WORLD OF JOY.

And how much longer shall we weary [our] listeners with our common and ignorant words? After these things then, let us proceed and advance to the sickness which smote the holy man, and to those things which happened during his illness, so that with the end of his career we may also bring our lines to a close. Now while that holy man was bringing down this and such-like help upon all mankind, one by one the years of his life came to an end, and old age and feebleness troubled him; day by day he began to complete the path of his journey in this world and to set out on the paths of death, so that he also might go and join all the saints in the never-ending mansions for which and because of which he had toiled all his days. And the holy man fell ill of a disease of the bowels and suffered from diarrhoea for four months, like the majority of the holy men who have departed and who will depart from the world. And at the end of the months of his sickness the report of his departure from this life was carried to all the nobles and governors of the country, and they were gathered together and came to see him. [p. 404] And the honourable and noble Zâdôî bar-Zadhbhâh, [who] is worthy of mention for good because of his noble deeds and his protection of the schools,—for he had taken upon himself the burden of maintaining them—was also among the many who came to the monastery to see the holy man, and the honourable Zâdôî, who was sitting behind Rabban, supported him in the hour of his death, and he was grieved at the departure¹ of the holy old man. And while all the brethren were standing before him, (now some of them were sitting) the eyes of the blessed man dropped tears of grief, and he wept abundantly. And when the brethren saw that he wept, all the believers wept also, saying to him, "If thou weapest, Rabban, and art grieved at thy departure, what shall we who are sinners do?" He said to them, "I am not afraid of death, neither am I grieved at my departure, but I am afraid of the judgment of our Lord, for God judgeth by fire. If Saint Paul was terrified at the judgment hall of God and said, 'It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God,² who am I that I should not be stupefied with terror? For I know not what the Judge will make me hear there, or what answer He will return to me, for I know not whether my work will be pleasing before Him or not. And behold I am going along³ a road upon which I have not journeyed, and to a judgment hall of sin into which I have not entered, and the face of the Judge is terrible towards sinners, among whom I am reckoned. His Holy Cross shall be an advocate for me before His justice, and I will take refuge in it;" and as the holy old man wept and [his] tears poured down wetting his beard and his neck, a cry went up to heaven from every man. [p. 405] And after the weeping and the tears the beauty of grace shone upon his countenance and drew forth great astonishment from every man, and the eyes of the brethren and of the believers looked upon him. And when they saw him in that changed condition of heavenly splendour, and saw that he had composed his mind and had become peaceful [after] his weeping, the brethren and monks answered and said to him, "Our father, to whom wilt thou leave us? From this day and henceforth who will hedge us in from before the enemies by whom we are surrounded? Whilst thou wast alive they swallowed us up alive, and when thou art dead what evil will they not make us suffer? They will certainly make a desolation of this poor monastery." The blessed man answered and said to them, "My brethren, take heed to your redemption and to your reward, and multiply [your] prayers for the Church and the government. Pray also for me that I may have openness of face before our Lord, [and if it be granted to me] by the fifth day of the week not one of your enemies shall remain alive;" and this actually came to pass according to the old man Rabban's word, for he departed [this] life at dawn on the fifth day of the week and by the following fifth day they had all come to an end and perished, [and], their lands¹ are made desolate unto this day. And having his mouth filled with praise, and admonishing and encouraging the brethren not to be cast down before the afflictions and sufferings and trials from within and without, he delivered up his soul to his Master and ended his valiant contest; and immediately the whole house in which he died was filled with a sweet smell. And the teachers, and scholars, and priests, and deacons, and believing men were gathered together and came to be blessed at the bier of the holy old man, [p. 406] and every man wept and was sad and mournful

by reason of the departure of [their] father; the monks for their head and governor who watched on behalf of their souls; the widows for the supporter of their lives; the orphans for the foster-father of their destitution; the poor for the man who filled their bosoms with his crumbs; the wandering strangers and abjects for him that gathered together their wanderings [into a house]; the afflicted for the man who relieved their need; the troubled for the man who alleviated the pains of their wounds; the oppressed for him that delivered them from their oppressors; the sick for the physician who healed them for nothing; those who were in anguish for the consoler of their sorrow; and the rich because he made their alms wing their way to heaven. In his death the man who was entirely and in every way like unto Paul was lamented by every man. And the venerable and holy body, which was in truth the fountain of help, was borne with honour and laid in the south side of the martyrrium in front of the shrine of the bones of the true ascetic Rabban Râ'yâ, the disciple of Rabban Cyprian, for the holy Gabriel had commanded and strictly enjoined that the pavement¹ should be his grave, as it was that of Paul his brother, and commanded that no monument should be built above him. And so he was buried by all the grades of ecclesiastics in all the honour of which the majesty of that holy old age was worthy; and he left behind in the world the fair renown of his strife, and the sweet odour of his name. The death of the righteous is not death, but sleep.

And some days after his death and departure God

wrought a wonderful thing. Two sick men vexed by devils were brought to this monastery, and when they had gone into the martyrrium and had bowed down before Rabban's grave they received healing immediately.

And again a certain Persian, [p. 407] who was hostile to the monastery, came and took away an ass from the community by force; and when he had gone forth to depart the Lord smote him with a severe pain, and with an abundant gift he brought the ass back here.

To God now, for Whom holy men live, Who doeth for the benefit of our nature everything which He doeth in their lives and in their deaths, to Him Who hath made victorious the early [saints], Who hath sustained those who come next, and Who hath made mighty those who come last, be praise, and honour, and adoration, and exaltation, from every rational being who hath lived and who liveth. By the prayers of these saints whose histories we have recounted, may He make His blessings to accompany this assembly in all its crises, and may He extend to it His help, now and always, and for ever and ever! Amen.

Here endeth the book of the history of the life of Rabban Gabriel, the priest and true ascetic, and with it endeth [the whole work].

By the help of our Lord, and by the support of His power here endeth the writing of this book which is called the "Book of Governors," which consisteth of the histories, and noble triumphs, and profitable stories concerning the holy men and ascetics who lived in the holy Monastery of Bêth 'Âbhê, together with discourses divided into distinct chapters, which shew forth all their histories, and which was composed by the divinely pious man and spiritual philosopher Mâr Thomas, Bishop of Margâ. May his prayers, and those of his master Mâr Jacob, and of the saints whose noble triumphs he wrote, be a high wall to all believers, [p. 408] especially to the poor scribe, and to the man who had this spiritual composition copied, and may the Lord God hold them worthy of the remission of [their] sins in the day of judgment! Amen.
